Chinese Driven to Peiping's Walls as Japan Opens Major Offensive; 1,300 Americans Are Imperiled

Wages Bill Faces Delay By Flood of Amendments

Escapes Alteration in First Day of Senate Debate.

Barkley Presses For Speedy Vote

Anti-Lynching Rider May Be Used to Prolong Discussion.

By Robert C. Albright.

A rocky barrier of modifying amendments today cluttered the Senate road ahead of the Administration's wages and hours bill after a colorless day of opening debate that left the legislative calm unrippled.

First dynamite from the Democratic South, center of opposition to the measure, was expected to explode today. Leaders, fighting to save at least this measure before the stampede to adjournment, claimed the votes to pass it.

Sleek, mild-voiced Senator Hugo L. Black, co-author of the 40-cents-an-hour minimum, 40-hours-a-week maximum work legislation, opened his offensive with an indictment of "pauper wages" and "long hours of work injurious to health."

Then the steady flow of modifying amendments started. They ranged from a proposed child-labor exemption and exemptions for seasonal fish, fruit and vegetable cannery workers to a complete substitute based on a Nation-wide unemployment census.

None reached a vote, but Majority Leader Alben W. Barkley served notice he will press for speedy disposition today and summon the Senate in session an hour earlier tomorrow if the bill is not passed.

Filibuster Threatened.

Threat of a Senate filibuster still hovered over the measure, while opponents, withholding their fire for the moment, privately debated whether to slow down the legislation in the Senate or pass the fight to the House.

A possible vehicle for extended controversy lay in a suggested attempt to offer the Wagner-Van Nuys anti-lynching bill as a rider, but this possibility was diminished by failure of a similar attempt Monday on the Wagner train limit bill.

Another serious barrier might be raised in the form of amendments placing labor's responsibility in fulfillment of Wagner act contracts on a par with employer requirements.

Vandenberg to Take Floor.

Such amendments, together with prohibitions on union coercion of employes, and right of employer appeals to the Labor Board, will be discussed today by Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan.

Vandenberg may content himself with a discussion of the amendments as applied to the Wagner labor relations act, but the possibility remained they might be injected into the wages and hours fight as proposed amendments to the Black bill.

Meantime a more drastic companion bill was traveling a rough road in the House Committee, with little chance of a favorable report this week. Chairman Mary T. Norton was called to the White House for a morning conference and brought back reiteration of the President's desire for passage this session.

There was a growing feeling that the real fight on the legislation would come in the House. There a labor committee is severely tightening provisions. Battle lines were forming all along the front and a first test of opposition may come in the Rules Committee.

Amended in Committee.

The House labor group yesterday gave the proposed Labor Standards Board power to invalidate collective bargaining agreements providing for lower wages and longer hours than those prescribed. This action resulted from committee defeat of the Ramspeck amendment prohibiting the board from inter-

Appointee of Roosevelt Likely to Get Quick Senate Approval.

Youthful Hobart Newman will take his place on the bench of the District Police Court without any "revolutionary plans" in mind, he declared yesterday after President Roosevelt appointed him to succeed Judge Isaac R. Hitt, whose term expired six months ago.

"I expect to follow along in the good work already started down there. I have two or three pet and personal traffic ideas, maybe; but nothing extraordinary.

"Besides, I will be so busy getting started this summer that I won't have time for thinking up many new plans. My work will be heaviest in the summer, you know. This is not the Supreme Court to which I am being appointed."

Police Court Judge Isaac R. Hitt, who retires this week, said last night that he plans to resume the practice of law. He soon will be 73, his health is none too good, and many of the clients he had before he went on the bench 13 years ago are dead or have moved away. Nevertheless, Judge Hitt is determined to hang out his shingle again.

"I haven't laid anything aside," he said, "and, of course, there are no retirement provisions for Police Court judges."

Judge Hitt didn't say so, but friends explained that one reason he hadn't laid anything aside was his generosity.

Madrid Guns Stop Rebels West of City

Attackers Retreat to Own Trenches Under Heavy Fire.

Loyalists Say They Have Reserves to Crush Franco.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, July 27.—Insurgents hammered government lines west of Madrid again today, but the assaults were repelled and the attackers apparently weakened by exhaustion, the government said.

The government claimed that the charging insurgents dropped back to their own trenches under withering machine-gun fire.

It was the third day of fierce struggle since Gen. Francisco Franco's men recaptured Brunete, strategically situated, 15 miles west of Madrid. Artillery crashed almost incessantly. Planes dumped bombs on the sector.

Rebels Claim Gain.

(Insurgent accounts received at Hendaye, France, declared Franco's men pushed their way to the outskirts of Villanueva de la Canada, about 4½ miles north of Brunete, and nearly wiped out two government brigades, leaving only about 300 of an estimated 3,000 men.)

The government's advance, designed to cut off the insurgents who have been lying in the city's western outskirts since last November, was halted by the insurgent conquest of Brunete. But the government declared it had at least twice as many reserves as the insurgents and expressed confidence it could win any major battle, if Franco should push on toward the city.

Gen. Jose Miaja, the Madrid defense commander, had rushed up two strong contingents of reinforcements to keep the insurgents out of Villanueva de la Canada.

Alleged Spy Held.

Within the city authorities staged a new hunt for illicitly held fighting materials. They announced discovery of 45 rifles, 6 Italian-made bombs and 10,000 cartridges in searches of several houses.

Police also said they had arrested a Spaniard accused of falsely representing himself as an employe of a foreign consulate and charged him with engaging in insurgent spying and propaganda.

Prisoners declared insurgent commanders are dressing thousands of Spaniards in Moorish costumes, and teaching them Moorish war cries to terrify the government soldiers.

Captives added that Franco was preparing for a drive in a new district, perhaps on the Teruel front of eastern Spain. Such a move would be designed to cut off Catalonia, loyal to the government, from the government-held territory to the south on the eastern seaboard.

Lost Brigade Holds On.

Madrid, July 27 (U.P.).—Wave on wave of rebel shock troops hurled themselves in vain tonight against a loyalist brigade cut off from its army and surrounded in the town of Quijorna.

Hungry, thirsty, their ammunition almost gone—the 2,000 to 3,000 men in the brigade fought back savagely from trenches in the ruins of the town. Their one desperate hope was that a relief column would reach them from Valdemorillo, to the north.

The loyalist high command was unable to send a rescue force across the Sierra Guadarrama plain to Quijorna, 15 miles west of Madrid, because of enemy pressure on Villanueva de la Canada.

Villanueva de la Canada is midway between Quijorna and Valdemorillo, cutting off the "lost brigade" from communication with the main loyalist columns.

45 Airplanes Cover Advance; Hull Strives to Prevent War

State Department Told Conflict Appears to Be Inevitable.

Daily Pleas Sent To Belligerents

Neither Mediation Nor Kellogg Pact Can Yet Be Invoked.

With 1,300 Americans at Peiping, China, menaced by the threat of a major Chinese-Japanese clash there, Secretary of State Hull and his advisers and ambassadors are exerting every possible effort and influence within diplomatic limitations to prevent further hostilities.

The Secretary of State revealed yesterday he has had the Ambassadors to China and Japan express to those governments this country's hope there will be no further fighting in the ancient walled city, where the tension centers.

Despite these efforts, however, it appeared last night such a conflict as has been feared is imminent. The Chinese Embassy here made public an official cablegram from Peiping saying the Chinese government had decided to reject Japan's demands for withdrawal of Chinese troops, and that "North China seems on the eve of a major conflict."

Silent on Kellogg Pact.

Asked whether any further diplomatic steps had been taken to prevent war in the Far East, Secretary Hull said the department was endeavoring to keep almost daily contact with the representatives of the two governments, in order to be in a position to do or say anything that might be helpful in preserving peace and avoiding hostilities.

Asked whether there had been any thought of invoking the Nine-Power or Kellogg treaties, the Secretary said he had insufficient information as to what are the definite and more permanent objectives of the governments involved to discuss that question at present.

Reminded that the British and French governments were reported also to have expressed their hope to China and Japan that there would be no further fighting, Secretary Hull said this country was pursuing its own separate and independent course, a policy he said would be followed at the beginning of the new Far Eastern crisis.

On the subject of mediation, raised by newspapermen, Mr. Hull reminded that mediation requires the consent of both parties in a controversy. He pointed out that it is not the province of any government to enter the situation and seek to mediate without the agreement of both governments affected.

He then made plain, without going into any one step or single phase of the situation, that the United States officials are seeking, within what are considered judicious limitations, to exert every effort to compose the situation.

The Chinese Message.

The cablegram made public by the Chinese government read:

"Chinese authorities of Peiping decided this afternoon to reject Japanese demands for withdrawal of units of the Twenty-ninth Army from Peiping and vicinity within specified time. The Japanese military presented an ultimatum yesterday demanding, firstly, that units of the Thirty-seventh Division of Lukouchiao area retire to Changsintien; secondly, that other units of the same division inside Peiping and Hsiyuan retire westward of Yungting River before Wednesday noon; immediately after evacuation of these areas, the entire Thirty-seventh Division must withdraw to Paoting.

"According to the latest flash serious fighting is occurring on outskirts of Peiping and all along the railway between Peiping and Tientsin. Although details are presently unavailable, north China seems on the eve of a major conflict."

2 Washington Officers Stand Guard on Walls of Compound

Fears Expressed for 8 Americans Caught in Battle Zone.

COL. JOHN MARSTON,

An estimated 1,300 American citizens last night were on the scene of hostilities between soldiers of China and Japan in Peiping where already a Marine guard has mounted the walls of the United States Embassy with machine guns and ammunition.

The estimate of American nationals in a city where lives of all foreigners are in imminent danger as troops of both sides clash within and without the gates of the ancient Chinese capital, was provided by the State Department. It includes the Marine guard, commanded by Col. John Marston, of Merion Station, Pa.

Fears were expressed early today for the safety of eight Americans still at Yenching University and believed within the danger zone of fighting last night and early today between Japanese and Chinese troops, the Associated Press reported.

There were five women and three men at the university, including President J. L. Stuart, who insisted early last night that he would stay—"it is my duty."

The American Embassy had advised them to take refuge within Peiping proper.

The list of Americans includes two officers of the embassy guard who make their homes in Washington. They are Maj. James L. Denham, of 1324 Monroe street northwest, and Second Lieut. Frederick Ramsey, jr., the son of Col. and Mrs. Frederick A. Ramsey of 3642 Jocelyn street northwest.

Other officers of the guard at Peiping living near Washington are Capt. John F. Hough, 3636 Thirtieth street, Mount Rainier, Md.; Capt. Jo-

Japanese Promise to Spare Peiping From Aerial Bombing.

U.S. Marines Guard Embassy Quarter

Nippon's Action Called Virtually a War Declaration.

By the Associated Press.

Tientsin (Wednesday), July 28.—The Japanese high command announced today its advance guard had captured Nanyuan barracks, south of Peiping, after desperate fighting in which the Chinese Twenty-ninth Army was driven back on the walls of the ancient city.

The Japanese army communique said its victorious troops entered the stronghold at 11:30 a. m. (10:30 p. m. Tuesday, E. S. T.) and the defeated Chinese of the Thirty-seventh Division were retreating to the northwest toward Peiping.

The main body of the Japanese army was reported executing a wide flanking movement to cut off the Chinese retreat.

The Japanese infantry attack was supported by squadrons of bombers whose repeated attacks inflicted heavy casualties.

Will Spare Peiping.

Forty-five Japanese war planes, including heavy bombers, roared from Tientsin airfields at dawn today to support a major Japanese offensive against Chinese barracks guarding Peiping.

Troops moved to encircle Peiping itself, carrying out the Tientsin Japanese command's warning that it was taking "free action" to force withdrawal of Chinese troops from Peiping and neighboring barracks. Some regarded the warning as a virtual declaration of war by the Japanese army.

Japanese troops were pushing from Fengtai, along with the Tientsin force.

Barracks west and south of Peiping were objectives of the aerial bombers, but the Japanese command insisted that Peiping itself would not be bombarded from the air.

The bombers first attacked Nanyuan barracks, south of Peiping, and "large losses were inflicted on the enemy," a Japanese communique said. The attack was at 6:30 a. m.

Troops moved against the Chinese barracks of Hsiyuan, just 3 miles northwest of ancient Peiping itself.

Unforgivable Provocation.

The Japanese army notified the Chinese today it was compelled to take independent action in the North China crisis.

The notification, which came 12 hours before the deadline set in a Japanese ultimatum for Chinese troop withdrawals from Peiping, was issued to Gen. Sung Cheh-yuan, commander of the Chinese Twenty-ninth Army and chairman of the Hopeh-Chahar Council, by Lieut. Gen. Katsuki, commander of the Japanese North China army.

The Japanese leader said the army was forced to take action because of the Twenty-ninth Army's failure to carry out agreements "as evidenced by repeated provocative acts which are insults to the Japanese army and which cannot be forgiven."

Katsuki advised Sung to withdraw all Chinese troops from Peiping "as their presence within its walls might lead to confusion and hostilities endangering foreigners."

The Japanese notification followed the passing without apparent Chinese action of a Japanese-set deadline for withdrawal of units of the Thirty-seventh Division of the Twenty-ninth Chinese Army from west of Peiping.

Shanghai (Wednesday), July 28 (A.P.).—Severe fighting was reported around Peiping early today and the authorities of the ancient city were "prepared to engage the Japanese in a war of resistance."

Jesting House Votes Six Aides For President

Five Hours Spent on Hilarity Before Bill Is Passed.

By Sidney Olson.

Legislating in hilarious jigtime after almost seven months of dull and plodding debate, the House wise-cracked for five hours yesterday before voting to give the President six $10,000-a-year assistants "with a passion for anonymity."

The vote was 260 to 88. The bill now goes to the Senate.

The frayed nerves of Representatives who have slugged each other with verbal bludgeons ever since January over sit-down strikes, dictatorship, and the court bill, relaxed during the session yesterday. For the first time in many months the House members were back on the old happy hunting grounds of partisan politics. For a change, the Democrats were united in thwacking Republicans, while the G. O. P. members had a field day of fun at the Administration's expense.

Representative Harold Knutson (Republican), Minnesota, offered an amendment which would have required that no person over 70 years of age could be named by the President for the new jobs.

This was voted down in a burst of laughter. One Democrat, Representative John D. Dingell, of Michi-

Virginia Company Told to Reinstate Union Employes

By the Associated Press.

The Labor Relations Board ordered J. Freezer & Sons, Inc., yesterday to offer re-employment in the firm's East Radford, Va., shirt factory to Dephene, Sylvia and Grace Ridpath.

The board found the three sisters had been discharged March 27, 1936, for activity with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, a C. I. O. union.

The board also ordered the company to "relinquish its domination and control" of an employes' association and to quit discouraging membership in the Amalgamated or any other labor union.

After the Amalgamated started an organization drive, the board said, J. L. Kirkwood, "referred to by a witness for the company as a one-man chamber of commerce," enlisted the support of R. S. Hopkins, city councilman; H. Tyler, city attorney, and C. H. Howell, chief of police. The three, the board said, told several hundred employes at a meeting that "a union would not be beneficial to the welfare of the employes but would be harmful."

Navy Training For Boys Aim Of Roosevelt

President Believes Reserves Can Be Built Without More Laws.

By William V. Nessly.

President Roosevelt is considering building up what he considers is a more nearly adequate reserve of Navy personnel through training of youths 16, 17 or 18 years of age, it was revealed yesterday.

The President conferred on the proposal with Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of Naval Operations, and Rear Admiral Adolphus Andrews, chief of the Bureau of Navigation. He expressed the view that the plan could be put into operation through an item in the Navy appropriation bill, without any separate legislation.

Later, at a press conference, he recalled that at the start of the World War, while he was Assistant Secretary of the Navy, there were no naval rserves, and it became necessary to train 350,000 additional men and officers while the war was under way. After the war, in 1919, he said, he hoped it would be possible to take steps that would prevent a repetition of the situation. Nothing has been done by the Navy, however, he pointed out, though the Army went ahead with a comprehensive program.

No Pay for Boys.

On the theory that many boys of high schol age would like to get training in naval training stations and aboard ship, the new plan is being worked out. The Government would provide free board, lodging and clothes during the training period, perhaps six weeks in each summer, and, probably, transportation from the youths' homes to the

Deaths Reach 34 In Mexican Quake

Orizaba, Vera Cruz, Mexico, July 27 (A.P.).—The death toll of Sunday night's disastrous earthquake mounted tonight to 34. Hundreds were injured.

Rescue parties dug through ruins of homes and public buildings in the states of Vera Cruz and Puebla. A survey of the stricken region, extending fanwise to the northeast and southeast of Tehuacan, Puebla, showed widespread damage.

Residents said loss of life would have been far greater had not the first shocks been oscillatory ones, giving occupants of many houses time to flee into the open before subsequent shocks wrecked buildings.

Court Bans 'Peaches' In Browning Will Suit

Son, 14, Stabs Father in Back To Save Mother From Beating

A 14-year-old boy, rushing to aid and protect his mother, stabbed his father in the back yesterday afternoon.

Police reported that George W. Reed, 56, while intoxicated, was chasing his wife, Ellen, 49, with a club when their son, Louis 14, stabbed him in the back.

The scene was the rear yard of the Reed home at 2632 Douglas street northeast.

Neighbors notified police and a radio scout car went to the Reed home.

Reed was taken to Casualty Hospital.

The boy then was left at home in the custody of his mother.

Later the police decided the boy would be better off in the Receiving Home.

When a scout car arrived at the Reed home a second time, the elder Reed had returned from the hospital. According to police, he was creating a furor.

Police arrested him on a charge of disorderly conduct.

About that time, the son returned from serving a newspaper route and he, too, was taken into custody and charged with assault with a dangerous weapon.

Reed was taken to Gallinger Hospital and his son to the Receiving Home.

Airport Rules May End Plane Travel to N. Y.

Abandonment of Service Possible, Rickenbacker Warns Committee.

Discontinuance of all short haul air traffic between Washington and New York may result from restrictions suggested for Washington Airport, Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, general manager of Eastern Airlines, told the House Military Affairs Committee yesterday.

Pointing out that at its peak traffic justified 20 "merry-go-round" trips daily to New York, the World War ace declared that "since the beginning of the recent campaign to improve the safety of Washington Airport our traffic has fallen off until we are now running only 14 trips a day. If the rules now being prepared by the Department of Commerce severely restrict use of the present terminal, and make Bolling Field an auxiliary port, it may be necessary to abandon our short haul traffic between Washington and New York."

2 Bills Reported Out.

Meanwhile, the Senate Commerce Committee surprised observers by reporting favorably two airport bills without hearings. They are the King bill, authorizing the construction of an "airport of the future" at Camp Springs, Md., and the Copeland bill for the improvement of Washington Airport.

General approval for the proposal to improve the present air terminal was indicated by discussion between members of the House Committee. Representative H. Ewing Thomason, of Texas, suggested it might be well for the Federal Government to buy Washington Airport, and this suggestion also received the favorable consideration of the committee.

New Runway Hinted.

Ben King, local sportsman pilot, yesterday declared he had been in communication with the Navy Department on the possibility that the Camp Springs Airport and the new Navy radio receiving station at Cheltenham, Md., would be mutually objectionable. He said that he had been shown the exact site on which it was proposed to construct the air terminal and was now

Pangborn Plans Sea Hop In New 'All-Wing' Plane

London, July 27 (A.P.).—The American aviator Clyde Pangborn said tonight he might attempt a south Atlantic flight to the United States this fall in an "all wing" plane incorporating the fuselage as part of the wings. The plane now is under construction.

The "all wing" design is to give the craft "greater lift," with a cruising speed of 220 miles an hour at 12,000 feet. It was designed by an American, V. J. Burnelli. Only five planes of its type have been built, all in America, Pangborn said.

Favor for Rider May Help Pass D. C.'s Tax Bill

House Sanctions Tydings' Strategy by Dropping Separate Measure.

By James D. Secrest.

Although still adamant against a local income tax law, the House yesterday indicated its approval of the idea of attaching irrelevant riders on District legislation.

House leaders in effect approved the tactics by withdrawing the Miller-Tydings bill from scheduled consideration and passing the word along that it could be voted on as part of the conference on the District tax bill.

The Miller-Tydings bill, save for a Senate amendment, is identical with the Tydings rider tacked onto the tax measure over the protests of Chairman King, of the Senate District Committee.

It proposes to waive the Sherman antitrust act with regard to State laws which sanction price-fixing agreements between manufacturers and retailers.

Rider May Aid Bill.

The fact that many members are interested in seeing the Miller-Tydings bill enacted into law, however, probably will enhance chances for adoption of the conference report on the District tax bill.

Meanwhile, the way was cleared for a Senate-House conference on the tax bill as the Senate Judiciary Committee completed work on the revised court measure.

Senator King, freed from the Judiciary Committee task, said he will call a meeting of the conferees today. He confidently predicted that "we'll get a tax bill."

Meanwhile, the Board of Trade sent a delegation and brief to the

Lewis' Employes Unionize, to Ask Air Conditioning

John L. Lewis, who probably has negotiated more labor contracts as a representative of the workers than any other man in America, will find himself on the employer's side of the conference table one of these days, it developed last night with an announcement that office workers in the headquarters of his Committee for Industrial Organization have formed a union and are ready to negotiate a contract.

Moreover, the contract to be sought not only will be a model from the standpoint of wages and hours, but will include a "frill" or two not usually covered in standard labor agreements. The "frills" last night's announcement described as follows:

"The new office to which the C. I. O. is moving this week is not air-conditioned and the workers plan to discover if collective bargaining will have any effect upon lowering the temperature . . . The workers also want linen instead of paper towels."

Bill to Reform Lower Courts Gets Approval

Senate Judiciary Group Reports New Measure Unanimously.

The Senate Judiciary Committee yesterday unanimously approved and sent to the Senate a lower court reform bill—minus all of the controversial Supreme Court reorganization features carried in the President's dead judiciary bill.

Whipped into bill form in less than five days, the modified court measure will be reported to the Senate today by Senator Pat McCarran, Nevada Democrat. The bill becomes spearhead of a concerted effort to pass it, then adjourn Congress sine die.

Meantime, the President disclosed he was considering further delay in naming a Supreme Court successor to the retired Justice Van Devanter, until after Congress has adjourned.

The President said he has called on Attorney General Homer S. Cummings for an opinion on whether he can make a "recess" appointment to the court, even though the vacancy occurred while Congress was in session.

Mr. Roosevelt told reporters no direct precedent on the question has been found, although several other Government posts vacated during a session of Congress have been filled after the session adjourned.

Before approving the modified court reform measure yesterday, the Judiciary Committee ordered a favorable report on the Borah bill to reform receivership procedure by prohibiting agreements regarding attorney's fees, and fixing a maximum penalty of $10,000 and five years in prison for violation.

Senator William E. Borah (Republican), Idaho, first proposed the receivership measure as an amendment to the court reform bill, but the committee decided it should be pushed as separate legislation.

Need, Not Age, Basis.

The modified court measure approved yesterday omitted all reference to Supreme Court enlargement and failed to provide any additional lower court judges, but a memorial was added asking the Attorney General to recommend additional judges for the lower courts next session, on a basis of need, not age.

The bill provided:

1. Direct appeal to the Supreme Court in lower court constitutional litigation, either by the Attorney General or the aggrieved party.

2. Intervention in constitutional litigation by the Attorney General, who would be notified by the lower court judge.

3. Trial by three-judge panels in all cases where an injunction is sought to stay the enforcement of a Federal statute.

4. Reassignment of judges by the presiding circuit court judge in each circuit, where dockets are congested or a judge incapacitated. A judge serving outside home territory would be granted $10 a day subsistence instead of the present $5.

A proposed section, extending full pay retirement benefits to judges of United States administrative courts, was eliminated by the committee.

Senator McCarran was named chairman of a sub-committee to draft a report and to handle the measure when it comes up in the Senate.

Speedy Action Aim.

Sponsors of the measure will attempt to call it up as soon as the Black wages and hours bill is disposed of in the Senate. If the wages and hours debate is prolonged, an effort will be made to lay it aside temporarily to obtain right-of way for the court measure. Speedy action also will be sought in the House.

The committee's memorial on additional lower court judges requested that the Attorney General and the judicial council, made up of the senior circuit judges of each judicial circuit and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, make a survey of crowded lower court dockets. Legislation next session would be based on their recommendations.

First inkling that President Roosevelt may not name a successor to Van Devanter this session came at yesterday's White House press conference.

President Roosevelt said he had asked Attorney General Cummings for an opinion because there was some question whether the practice of filling vacant administrative offices during a Congressional recess, when they occurred while Congress was in session, could be followed in Supreme Court appointments.

Violinist McNair Wants To Be Mayor After All

Pittsburgh, July 27 (AP).—The unpredictable William H. McNair said today he would seek the Democratic nomination to the office of mayor from which he resigned last year. McNair, who quit the office because of a dispute with his party leaders, announced his candidacy shortly before the 4 p. m. deadline for filing nomination petitions.

The man who gained national attention because of his violin playing on Maj. Bowes' amateur hour had previously announced as a candidate for council.

4,500,000 Man-Days Of Work Lost in June

By the Associated Press.

The Labor Department estimated yesterday that 4,500,000 man-days of work were lost last month because of strikes. A preliminary survey showed 575 strikes started during June, that 300 were in progress June 1, and that 530 ended during the month.

In May, there were 261 in progress when the month started, 495 began during the month and 456 were settled.

'Finish Work, Then Adjourn,' Is View of Dissenter Griffith

REPRESENTATIVE JOHN K. GRIFFITH.

Freshman Congressman From Louisiana Wants to Go Home, but Only After Necessary Laws Are Passed.

By Liam K. Lenihan.

The collective Congressional foot may be itching for the road back, but plump, 54-year-old Congressman John Keller Griffith, Louisiana physician turned dentist, is a forthright dissenter.

"I am as anxious as the next fellow for an early adjournment of Congress, but not until all necessary legislation has been disposed of," he said. "One thing I emphasize—I am opposed to a recess."

Congressman Griffith lays down a code of ethics for the freshman legislator which he rigidly adheres to, let the chips fall where they may. He philosophizes thus:

"A newcomer to Congress should keep his mouth shut and his eyes open and ears wide open. He should look after the interests of his constituents in a quiet and dignified way. And, lastly, he should follow the leadership of his party insofar as it does not conflict with his own conscientious scruples."

Biographical sketch: He was born in Port Hudson, East Baton Rouge Parish, La.; was educated in the public schools at Port Hudson, later attending Louisiana State University. Graduated from the medical department of Tulane University, then became assistant superintendent of the East Louisiana State Hospital. After service in the World War he returned to general practice, and though never a candidate for political office until last year, was elected overwhelmingly to Congress. He is married to the former Vivian Comfort, of Slidell, La., and they have two children—Keller and Carolyn.

Hobbies: Hunting and fishing. Since coming here, however, he has confined spare-time activities to motor drives through the Eastern seaboard.

In an article in the current Saturday Evening Post, captioned "White House Tommy," Alva Johnston, the author, asserts that Thomas Corcoran "went to Washington when Eugene Meyer, head of the Federal Reserve Board, induced President Hoover to appoint him to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation."

Meyer, publisher of The Washington Post, last night sent the following telegram to Johnston:

Note from this week's Saturday Evening Post your statement that I induced President Hoover to appoint Tommy Corcoran to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Stop Mr. Corcoran was made a law clerk in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on my recommendation to the board of directors and as a law clerk he was a success Stop I did not induce and President Hoover did not appoint him to anything Stop He was a good clerk but occasionally needed to be kept in the traces Stop He distinguished himself most during my chairmanship of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at a very few parties which were given to celebrate some special occasion Stop Then he was one of the best story tellers and piano players on the staff Stop George S. Franklin at one time a member of the firm of McAdoo, Cotton & Franklin, later changed to Cotton, Franklin, Wright & Gordon, was the man who recommended him to me Stop If the present Administration had kept Tommy Corcoran and continued to keep him where I put him, there would not have been all this trouble Stop I hope you will seize an opportunity to make the facts clear Stop I do not feel that any proper blame attaches to me in connection with the emergence of Tommy Corcoran from law clerk into one of the leading statesmen of the country. EUGENE MEYER.

P. S. After dictating this telegram, I decided to save the expense and send it to you by mail."

1940 Election Goal Of Labor Leaguers

By the Associated Press.

Officials of Labor's Non-Partisan League, which supported President Roosevelt for a second term, said yesterday the organization would continue its operations to the 1940 general election.

The league was organized to support actively candidates for office considered by its membership to be favorable to labor.

John L. Lewis, chairman of the executive board, has placed Eli Oliver, executive director, for a year in charge of headquarters since the resignation of Senator George L. Berry (Democrat), Tennessee, as president. Other personnel changes also are planned.

Farley to Be Greeted By W. Va. Postmasters

Martinsburg, W. Va., July 27.—Postmasters of Newburg, Tunnelton, Terra Alta, Piedmont, Keyser and this city will greet Postmaster General James A. Farley Thursday when he returns by train to Washington. Congressman Jennings Randolph, of this district, will introduce the Postmaster General, who is expected to speak briefly.

Hamilton to Meet G.O.P. Heads Here

By the Associated Press.

John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, said yesterday he would confer with party leaders soon to strengthen the organization for the 1938 Congressional campaign.

He has already invited the 53 women members of the national committee to meet here August 11 to re-establish the woman's division.

After this conference, Hamilton said, he will discuss organizational procedure with G. O. P. leaders at a series of meetings in Washington.

He intends to visit Topeka, Kans., next week to confer with former Gov. Landon and other Kansas Republicans.

Democrats Bolt In Fight Over Robinson Seat

Arkansas County Committee Repudiates Bailey; Asks State Convention.

By the Associated Press.

Little Rock, Ark., July 27.—Factional differences within the Democratic Party in Arkansas over selection of a nominee for the United States Senate seat held by the late Joe T. Robinson became an open breach today.

Repudiating the action of the State Democratic committee in nominating Gov. Carl E. Bailey without a party primary, the Saline County committee issued a call for a State Democratic convention at Little Rock August 9 to make a nomination.

"There is a deep resentment throughout the State," said a unanimously adopted resolution, "over the autocratic and undemocratic action of the State committee in rejecting county petitions for a primary."

The Saline committee also charged Gov. Bailey, "after denouncing committee nominations time after time, has forced his own nomination at the hands of the State committee composed largely of appointees and employes of the State."

Bailey made no comment.

June P. Wooten, State Democratic chairman, said county committees were without authority to call a State convention, that such a call violated party rules and subjected participants to expulsion.

Meanwhile, two Democrats announced they would run as independents against the Governor in the special State election, which probably will be set for September 14. The announcements came from J. Rosser Venable, 48, Little Rock World War veteran, and Robert F. Waters, 48, Yell County school examiner and humorous writer.

Venable ran against Senator Robinson in last year's primary, but has never held public office. Waters is a newcomer in politics.

Mrs. Ewilda Robinson, widow of the Senator; Representative John L. McClellan, of Malvern, and C. A. Walls, of Lonoke, attorney and kinsman of the Robinson family, have been mentioned as possible independent candidates.

Aluminum Trust Suit to High Court

Philadelphia, July 27 (AP).—The Aluminum Co. of America won today the right to appeal to the United States Supreme Court a ruling that permitted the Government to press its antitrust suit against the company in New York.

However, the company was denied supersedeas, which would stay proceedings in the New York Federal District Court until the Supreme Court acted on the appeal.

Judge Patterson Joins Bituminous Commission

Appointment of Judge Robert C. Patterson, of Dayton, Ohio, as senior attorney on the National Bituminous Commission's staff was announced by the commission yesterday.

The commission expressed satisfaction in obtaining the services of Judge Patterson, "who for 18 years was a judge of the Court of Common Pleas after serving four years as assistant prosecutor and four years as prosecutor in Dayton."

Omission of 'Yardstick' Rates From TVA Power Contract Protested to Roosevelt.

A CONGRESSIONAL GROUP yesterday carried to President Roosevelt its fight to force the Government's "yardstick" rates into the TVA contract to supply power to the Arkansas Power & Light Co.

Headed by Representative Rankin, of Mississippi, the group protested to the President against omission from the contract provision that the power must be resold at the "yardstick" rates set for communities to charge consumers. Without such a provision, the bloc held, the contract would be invalid under the law.

Rankin was accompanied by Representatives John E. Miller, Arkansas; Knute Hill, Washington; Sam Hobbs, Alabama; John J. Sparkman, Alabama; John McClellan, Arkansas; H. Jerry Voorhis, California; Orville Zimmerman, Missouri, and Walter Pierce, Oregon.

Later, at his press conference, the President said the matter was a technical one which would eventually have to go to the Attorney General for a ruling.

Rankin said the group also discussed with the President the allocation of funds from the "so-called relief fund" of $1,500,000,000 for construction of rural power lines to serve communities and individuals that could not otherwise be reached.

"AUTHORITATIVE INFORMATION" that Germany plans to establish a colony in Mexico to develop helium and mineral resources was laid before the House Naval Affairs Committee by Representative O'Connell, of Rhode Island. His statement was made during a hearing on proposed construction of an airship to replace the Los Angeles.

O'Connell said an American citizen had learned of existence of helium in Mexico and had tried to work out an agreement with the Mexican government for production of the gas for commercial aviation.

Later the same man communicated with German authorities, O'Connell said, for a similar purpose.

O'Connell told newsmen Germany subsequently began negotiating directly with Mexico to acquire the gas and planned to send colonists to the area.

"Whether they have succeeded in working out this plan, I do not know," he added.

Rear Admiral Arthur B. Cook, chief of Navy Aeronautics, recommended that the Navy build a new airship as an experimental aircraft carrier. He made it plain his suggestions, which conflicted sharply with those expressed by Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of Naval Operations, represented his personal viewpoint.

Commander Charles E. Rosendahl, Navy expert on lighter-than-air-craft, supported Cook's idea but said it did not go far enough.

"We must have the training ship," he said. "But that doesn't solve the problem because we don't know what we're training for."

THE SENATE PASSED a resolution extending for two years Congressional approval of an interstate compact among oil-producing States for conservation of oil and gas . . . Amendment of the 1930 tariff act to halt what he calls evasions of duty in whale oil importations, is sought by Representative Bland, of Virginia . . . President Roosevelt sent to the Senate the nomination of Clarence Poe, of North Carolina, to be a member of the Federal Board of Vocational Education.

SENATE ACTION sent to the White House a bill authorizing construction of six naval auxiliary vessels at a maximum cost of $50,000,000.

The Senate agreed to House amendments to the bill, which provides for a new seaplane tender, destroyer tender, mine sweeper, submarine tender, fleet tug and oil supply ship.

The chief House amendment specified that not less than 50 per cent of the ships should be built in Government navy yards, and authorized a 6 per cent preference for bids received from Pacific Coast builders.

THE HOUSE APPROVED a bill by Representative Boland, of Pennsylvnia, dispensing with a Federal requirement that State-owned liquor stores file monthly reports with the Internal Revenue Bureau. The measure goes to the Senate.

The bureau said 15 States would be affected. They are Idaho, Iowa, Maine, Michigan, Montana, New Hampshire, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia and Wyoming.

A SAFE SUPPLY of "strategic materials" for war, such as tin, is the object of his bill now before the House Military Affairs Committee, Representative McReynolds, of North Carolina, said . . . Representatives Boykin, Jarman, Patrick, Hobbs and Sparkman, all of Alabama, accompanied President R. C. Foster, of the University of Alabama, to the Interior Department Monday to request Secretary Ickes to allot $281,851 for a new library at the university . . . Senator Harrison, of Mississippi, asked Congress to authorize Mississippi to turn over to the State department of the United Spanish War Veterans any money left of funds allotted for compensation and expenses of Spanish War veterans.

REPRESENTATIVE CRAWFORD (Republican), of Michigan, says the State Department is "inconsistently" blocking Congressional efforts to limit exportation of scrap iron to foreign nations for armament purposes.

Secretary Hull, he said, is "waving the olive branch of peace to the world with one hand and with the other holding back restrictions that would prevent thousands of tons of American scrap iron being molded into implements of war."

U. S. Puts 15 Ships Up for Public Sale

By the Associated Press.

The Maritime Commission invited competitive bids yesterday on 15 of its laid-up vessels.

The bids will be opened here August 31. The vessels were offered to the public either for scrapping or operation exclusively in foreign waters.

Six of the vessels are located in the Hampton Roads area in Virginia, six at Staten Island and three at Mobile, Ala.

The commission reserved the right to sell the vessels on the basis deemed to be in the best public interest and laid down alternative conditions to get satisfactory prices.

Limit on Freight Trains Denounced as Mistake

Chicago, July 27 (AP).—Edward Flynn, executive vice president of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, said tonight he felt the bill passed by the United States Senate yesterday limiting freight trains to 70 cars was "a mistake" which would "lead to an increase in freight rates."

Flynn said the Burlington trains averaged only between 50 and 60 cars, but that road beds at some places have been built to accommodate trains up to 125 cars. "This bill," he said, "will wreck investments of that kind."

Strike Stops Service On Mexican Air Line

Mexico City, July 27 (AP).—The Mexican Aviation Co. said tonight that service on its Los Angeles and Brownsville, Tex., lines would not be resumed before Friday because of legal moves by its striking employes.

The employes yesterday obtained a 72-hour injunction against a conciliation board's decision outlawing the week-old strike. The board had ordered the strikers to return to work in 24 hours. The strike began July 17 when 250 workers asked higher wages and shorter hours.

Farouk to Omit Brilliant Rites At 'Investiture'

Politics, Heat Will Prevent Ceremonies for New Egyptian King.

By the Associated Press.

Cairo, Egypt, July 27.—King Farouk will be invested as ruler of Egypt Thursday in a ceremony stripped of elaborate ritual.

Abandonment of plans to mark the event with a great and rich Oriental religious ceremony has caused much disappointment here.

Farouk, in fact, will not be crowned at all, but will take an oath to launch his active reign.

Three reasons were given for eliminating the religious ceremony which was to have taken place in El Rifai Mosque and in which the sword of Mohamed Ali the Great was to have been girded on the King by Sheikh Moustafa El Maraghi, leader of Egyptian Moslems, who once studied at Columbia University.

King Farouk himself was understood to have insisted that an elaborate ritual along the lines of King George's coronatoin in London would be out of place in Cairo. There is no crown of Egypt and no precedent for a coronation, since Farouk is the first Egyptian ruler to succeed as King since the Mamelukes of the Middle Ages.

Politics Intervene.

Political leaders, anxious to get the country working smoothly under its newly acquired independence, saw another snag in a religious ceremony in which Sheikh Moustafa, leader of Moslem thought and rector in El Azhar University, would, of necessity, play a dominating role.

Sheikh Moustafa, informed quarters said, hitherto has had no political power.

"Give him the right to 'anoint and crown' our king and we shall have him meddling in affairs of state," it was said.

The third reason mentioned was that the heat of July, when the average temperature is around 95 degrees Fahrenheit in the shade, and the strain it might impose on aged notables taking part in the long-drawn rites.

Oath in Parliament.

The ceremony, as planned now, really will be an investiture. Farouk will drive to and from Parliament where, seated on his throne, he will take the oath before the members to "respect and obey the constitution and laws of the Egyptian people, maintain my country's independence and to defend its territory against any aggression."

Minor festivities, including a review of 15,000 Egyptian troops and assumption by the king of the rank of field marshal as supreme commander of the army, will follow the investiture, fixed for Thursday since Farouk attains his majority on that day according to the Egyptian calendar.

Many Egyptians, impressed by the recent British coronation, have expressed regret that there is to be no religious ceremony.

Remembering that Egypt has been a conquered country for thousands of years and that the late King Fuad himself succeeded his brother in 1917 only as Sultan, they would have liked as grandiose a ceremony as possible to inaugurate the new era of independent monarchy.

Ford Motor Chiefs Accuse Worker

Detroit, July 27 (AP).—Ford Motor Co. foremen explained to a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner today their reasons for the discharge of a number of workmen.

The NLRB, charging unfair labor practices, had listed the employes as having been dismissed because of union sympathies or membership. This the Ford witnesses denied.

Dennis E. McKinney a foreman, testified he discharged three men for "deliberate planned inefficiency" and because "they were part of a group who did not have the best interests of the Ford Motor Co. at heart."

Objections from Louis J. Colombo, sr., chief Ford counsel, were overruled by Examiner John T. Lindsay. Finally Colombo shouted Lindsay was "treating me like a horse thief," and was "permitting Ford company witnesses to be bulldozed."

Durham Cleared By State Auditor

Richmond, Va., July 27 (AP).—State Auditor L. McCarthy Downs reported to Gov. Peery today that an audit of the accounts of S. A. Durham, suspended steward of the Southwestern State Hospital at Marion, disclosed all funds properly accounted for and records well kept.

The Governor released the auditor's statement without comment.

Durham, who took office late last year, was suspended by Dr. George Wright, superintendent of the hospital, shortly after the recent organization of the new General State Hospital Board.

Demanding an audit of his accounts, Durham refused to turn over his keys and records until the audit was completed.

Mexican Consul Protests 'Sacrifice'

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Mexican Consul Adolfo Dominguez protested to Pan-American Exposition officials at Dallas the substitution of a girl for a warrior in an Aztec sacrificial scene in the "Cavalcade of the Americas." The producer said it was done to add sex appeal. Shown above is Geraldine Robertson, Texas centennial beauty, in the protested scene.

Mexican-U. S. Diplomatic Row Threatens in Sex Appeal Drama

Consul Claims Pepping Up of Texas Fair Pageant 'Sacrifice' Is an Injustice to the Ancient Aztec Indians.

By the Associated Press.

Dallas, Tex., July 27.—A dispute over primitive Aztec customs, with sex appeal as a complication, threatened to become a diplomatic problem between the United States and Mexico today.

Adolfo Dominguez, Mexican consul in Dallas, clashed with officials of the greater Texas Pan-American Exposition over substitution of a maiden for a warrior in an Aztec pageant.

The protested scene depicts Aztec priests sacrificing a virgin, dressed only in a feather mantle. Swarthy warriors hold the struggling girl while a dagger is supposedly plunged through her heart.

Dominguez told the director general of the exposition, Frank L. McNeny, that the Aztecs sacrificed warriors and not women, and that placing a girl on the altar was an injustice to the founders of Mexico.

"All these things happened two or three thousand years ago," McNeny argued. "I can't see why Mexico should feel affronted. It is a very lovely historic scene. Besides, if Mexico staged a show in which the Indians in the early days of this country scalped women, I'm sure the United States Government would not protest."

McNeny indicated the scene would not be changed.

A. L. Vollman, producer of the attraction, which is staged in the open before a grandstand, explained that the change was made two days ago to add a little sex appeal to the historic drama.

"Nobody cares about seeing a warrior sacrificed," he said. "But a good-looking girl in nothing but a feather mantel! That's different! It's packing them in the aisles."

$60,000,000 Offering By Commodity Credit

By the Associated Press.

The Commodity Credit Corporation invited subscriptions yesterday to a $60,000,000 note issue.

The notes, dated August 2, 1937, will mature May 2, 1938, bearing interest of 1 per cent. They will be secured by collateral notes secured in turn by negotiable warehouse receipts on 1,679,082 bales of cotton, valued at $90,000,000.

Liberals Call For Britain to Increase Arms

Government Denies Heavy Cannon Menacing Gibraltar.

By the Associated Press.

London, July 27.—Liberals clamored in the House of Commons tonight for more protection against foreign invasion of England.

Foreign guns frowning on Gibraltar and the possibility of some British town suffering the fate of Guernica, the war-ravaged northern Spanish city, were cited in debate of the government's home defense proposals.

Winston Churchill, former chancellor of the exchequer, joined the critics of the government program and asked for an official statement on foreign gun emplacements near Gibraltar.

"We want to know whether heavy cannon have been mounted—cannon much larger than would be required for the exigencies of the Spanish war—whether these have been mounted on both sides of this narrow strip of water which flows between Europe and Africa and gives us entry into the Mediterranean, Churchill declared.

Defense Co-ordination Minister Sir Thomas Inskip replied that guns mounted on insurgent Spanish soil near Gibraltar "are few in number, and do not threaten Gibraltar. He said the guns are not sighted for that purpose.

Churchill contended Gibraltar should be considered in home defense debate since it was a life-line for assuring British food supplies. In addition he stressed its importance because of Britain's obligations to friendly Mediterranean powers such as Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey.

He claimed the Rock of Pantelleria, Italy's small island midway between Sicily and Africa, is being fortified and made into a powerful airbase.

While the defense measures were being debated, Italian Minister Count Dino Grandi conferred lengthily with Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain.

It was understood they discussed the nonintervention committee deadlock over a program for isolating the Spanish war, a stalemate reached principally because of Italian objections to a compromise plan.

Grain Yield Short, Reich Limits Uses

Berlin, July 27 (AP).—Germany fought a short grain harvest today with an order forbidding the use of wheat or rye for anything but bread. None may be used as animal fodder. The harvest is expected to be from 10 to 15 per cent below average.

Henceforth each bread grain farmer must deliver his whole harvest to the government, keeping back only enough for his own family.

Sugar beets are expected to replace rye as a fodder substitute.

Wife of Man Tried For Attack Denies Prosecution Story

Greenfield, Mass., July 27 (AP).—A Keene, N. H., gas-line-station owner and Mrs. Thomas E. Elder disagreed today as to whether her husband wore a coat on the night the Government claims he assaulted S. Allen Norton, former colleague at Mount Hermon School, "with intent to murder."

Russell Batchelder, rebuttal witness for the prosecution, said Elder wore a dark, three-quarter-length coat early that night when he stopped at the station for gas. Mrs. Elder, last witness for the defense, testified Elder left their Keen hotel that night, for a brief time, wearing no coat. Previously Norton testified Elder wore a long coat.

Court recessed for the day after the jury heard Elder claim he was in Keene at the moment Norton claims he threatened him at the latter's Greenfield home, 40 miles away. Elder said Norton once described himself as a "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." Mrs. Elder declared her husband was in bed with her at the time of the assault.

The Government announced plans to call additional rebuttal witnesses tomorrow.

Farley Reassures Farmer and Labor

Oconomowoc, Wis., July 27 (AP).—Postmaster General Farley, speaking at the dedication of the new Oconomowoc postoffice today, said President Roosevelt was determined to go forward until he attained his objective of a permanent program for agriculture and for labor.

Farley predicted Federal farm aid "is now so generally accepted that it is safe to say no political parties will ever dare advocate any other policy."

Farley lauded achievements of the Administration and asserted there was a feeling the immediate future would find the United States again enjoying unrivaled prosperity.

Dr. Patterson Is Dead at 70; Ex-Cuba Envoy

Ambassador Succumbs in Havana a Month After His Marriage.

Dr. Guillermo Patterson y Jauregui, former Cuban ambassador to the United States, died in Havana Monday night of a heart attack, according to word received in Washington by his daughter, Mme. Ernest Schlatter, wife of the attache of the Swiss Legation.

He was married in June to his third wife, who was Senora Concetion Hernandez, a wealthy and beautiful Cuban widow.

Dr. Patterson, one of the most popular members of the Diplomatic Corps, was shifted in February to Mexico. He had been in Washington two years.

Another daughter, Miss Olga Patterson, who was his hostess here, remained in Washington as the guest of daughters of Senor Don Manuel Trucco, the Chilean Ambassador, and is now with them in Bluemont, W. Va.

Dr. Patterson was 70, although he generally was considered a much younger man and was known to Washington society as a perfect host who served dishes and as one of the best dancers in the entire social set.

Before coming to Washington in 1935, Dr. Patterson had been Minister to Great Britain for 10 years. Previously, he had been Minister to Brazil and Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

He was of Scotch-Cuban descent, which accounted for his Scotch appearance and also for the blonde hair of his younger daughter.

Dr. Patterson is survived by a third daughter, by a former marriage, Senora Margarita Patterson Rivas, and by two sons, Dr. Enrique Patterson, who was third secretary of the Cuban Embassy in Washington, and Dr. Guillermo Patterson.

Free Press Called Vital to Freedom

Atlanta, July 27 (AP).—Clark Howell, publisher of the Constitution, declared today that preservation of a free press is the only certain way to forestall "the depredations of plutocracy on one hand or predatory poverty on the other."

Howell told the Atlanta Kiwanis Club the Nation's newspapers are unfettered now, but warned "the price of freedom is eternal vigilance." He cited forthright criticism of President Roosevelt by widely read columnists as evidence that American newspapers are filling without fear their vital role of "censors" for the Government.

Howell, a director of the Associated Press, added "freedom of the press is that protection which makes our people independent and free, rather than slaves."

Suitor Garrotes Wife of Broker 'At Her Request'

Love 'Looked Hopeless,' Unemployed Salesman Tells N. Y. Police.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 27.—A dapper unemployed automobile salesman drove up to a Flushing police car today with the body of an attractive Queens mother whom he said he had strangled at her own request.

After visiting "seven or eight" Long Island night clubs last night, the salesman, Stanley A. Martin, jr., 29, told police later, he and the victim, Mrs. Florence Jackson, 37-year-old broker's wife, "discussed the futility" of their six-month love affair.

"We were both married," he said, "and it looked hopeless. She said, 'What's the use of living—why not kill me?'" and handed him the red leather belt she was wearing. He said he used it to garrote her.

A shrinking, sobbing figure when he appeared in the Manhattan police lineup, 5 feet 6 inches tall, Martin said he was separated from his wife and son.

Suicide Intention Failed.

He was taken from the lineup to Queens County Court, where he was held without bail on a homicide charge for hearing Thursday.

He planned, he told officers, to kill himself by driving the car, which was Mrs. Jackson's, off a bridge, but after holding her lifeless body in his arms for a long time he "sobered up" and drove around until he found the police car.

Pointing to the body on the seat beside him, he yelled "she needs a doctor!"

The police car piloted him to a hospital a mile away, where the woman was pronounced dead. Before the officers had started to question Martin, he reached behind the seat, pulled out the red belt and said "I did it with that."

Husband Phones in Search.

A few minutes later the woman's husband, Bert Jackson, called police to ask them to look for his wife.

"Your wife is dead," the desk sergeant answered. "She was out with some young fellow and he strangled her. We got the fellow. The body is at the Flushing hospital. You better come down here."

Jackson told detectives later he had known about his wife's affair, but considered Martin "to insignificant to worry much about."

Last week, he said, he found Martin in their home, which is in one of the best Queens residential sections, and told him to "get out and stay out." The Jacksons have a son, 4, and a daughter, 2.

Martin's wife, a comely red-haired woman of 29, told reporters she also had known about Martin and Mrs. Jackson and had been afraid "something dreadful" would happen.

The Martins were married in 1925 in Baltimore, where her home was, when Martin was studying at Johns Hopkins Medical School. They separated three months ago.

She said her husband had been "nervous and irresponsible" ever since he was struck by a hit-and-run driver two and a half years ago and received a double skull fracture.

Camp Letts' Boys Plan 'Turtle Derby'

Boys of Camp Letts, the Y. M. C. A. boys camp on the Rhode River, near Annapolis, Md., today will hold a field day, with various athletic events and a "turtle derby" as a novelty.

The derby is a race, where turtles are placed in the center of a ring and the one which first gets out of the circle is the winner.

Yesterday, the boys, in charge of Wilbur D. Bailey, camp director, visited the Naval Academy at Annapolis. The trip to and from Annapolis was made by bus.

Charles McDougal, 3620 S street, has received the award for the best all around boy camper during the second two weeks of the season. Twenty-one additional boys this week passed the beginners swim tests.

Winship Brings Back Praises Of Puerto Rico's Development

Governor Satisfied With Progress; Deplores Overpopulation.

By Scott Hart.

Gov. Blanton Winship of Puerto Rico, yesterday expressed satisfaction with what he called the big advancements of the small island and then busied himself around—he is here on a brief official visit—on behalf of his island people.

First off, the Governor said he was satisfied with the island's progress—and that was significant, because he sees all things with his hard old Army eye.

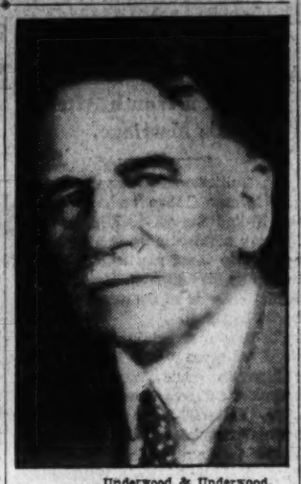
He leaned back in his chair, first to touch off some of the problems: Overpopulation; the fact that Puerto Rico, essentially an agricultural area, has a population of more than 500 people per square mile and the number is increasing every year. And the average income is quite low, coupled with insufficient employment. Then there is a troublesome political faction, referred to by the Governor as a "small group of fanatics," who can be "likened to the undesirable elements which cause disorder and seek to overthrow established government in various of our mainland cities."

Other Side of the Picture.

Then he leaned forward and told of the accomplishments: Glass manufacture, rum distilling and gem cutting are promising. The island has a grade of sand particularly suited to glass manufacture and the possibilities are being carefully investigated. Well over half the rum shipped into the States last year was supplied by the island and production moves at even greater pace this year.

The islands famous needlework and embroidery industry has been stepped up in the last four years. This product, as shipped to the States, increased in value from less than $12,000,000 in 1932, to more than $21,000,000 in 1936. He reeled off the outstanding activities: Marble and manganese, the hairnet, straw hat and button industries—linen suits and the wider field of agriculture. All of these the Governor boosted as if he were out on a stumping tour for the Puerto Rican Chamber of Commerce, almost forgetting what he later described as a marvelous climate, one that ranges around 76 in the summer and 73 in the winter.

The Governor talked little of himself. He has lived in Liberia and Java and the Philippines, has been shot at by the Germans in France (his breast was decorated with two medals for bravery), has felt his premises bombed in Puerto Rico and has otherwise heard of threats against his life.



Underwood & Underwood.
GOV. BLANTON WINSHIP.

A Work-Filled Career.

Since those early days when he practiced law in Macon, Ga., his home, he has seen service in the Spanish-American War; in the Philippine Insurrection; was judge-advocate general of the Army; was with General Funston at Vera Cruz; served in France; was commissioner to Liberia; was director general of service for settlement of all claims in Europe arising out of United States military operations and in one year settled over 100,000 claims; served on different commissions of reparations commission for execution of peace treaties, and on into a seemingly endless list.

From all of this he had retired when appointment as Governor of Puerto Rico came in 1934. Down on the island, he set himself first to aiding the people economically, and this has taken most of his time. But he has found moments to aim at making Puerto Rico more beautiful. He has beautified the grounds of La Fortaleze, the ancient Spanish fort that serves as the Governor's residence. He encouraged the insular government to plant flowers and shrubs along the roadsides and urged the citizens to plant flowers in their yards.

'Young Turks' Give Barkley Loyalty Pledge

Undercurrent for Passage of Bills Marks 'Social' for Senators.

The Senate's "back row club" of first-term Senators gathered around a festive board at the Willard Hotel last night and pledged allegiance to Senator Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky, new Senate majority leader.

On the surface it was just a "social" gathering of freshman Senators, with the veteran Barkley at the head of the table, but observers saw in it the makings of a new Administration "Young Turk" movement in the Senate.

At a recent meeting in the Senate, the group decided to resist agitation for an early adjournment and to "stay there" until the Administration program is put through. Most of them supported Barkley in his leadership race with Senator Pat Harrison.

Last night's gathering, arranged by Senator William H. Smathers (Democrat), of New Jersey, was an echo of the former meeting.

Views Exchanged.

Intermixed with a congenial round of story telling and Barkley's Kentucky anecdotes, was a serious exchange of legislative views and expressions in favor of "sticking out" the session, it was learned.

Senator Sherman Minton (Democrat), Indiana, insisted "no politics" was discussed, no program formulated.

He said:

"We just told stories and reminisced. But speaking for myself—and I believe the other guests agreed with me—I don't feel that Congress should adjourn until it has accomplished something."

Wants Bills Passed.

Asked if he meant the wages and hours, tax loophole plugging and housing measures should be enacted, he said:

"Absolutely."

The "first-termers" present included Green, of Rhode Island; Lee, of Oklahoma; Brown, of Michigan; Herring, of Iowa; Andrews and Pepper, of Florida; Berry, of Tennessee; Ellender, of Louisiana; Hitchcock, of South Dakota; Hughes, of Delaware; Minton, of Indiana, and Smathers, of New Jersey.

One or two of the group supported Harrison for the leadership and seven voted to recommit the President's court bill, but on most other issues they have voted as a unit with the Administration.

Snell in Call For Cummings' View on Books

Republican Inquires About Legality of Sales to Corporations.

Representative Bertrand Snell, of New York, Republican floor leader in the House, yesterday asked Attorney General Homer S. Cummings to give an opinion as to legality of Democratic National Committee sales of convention handbooks to corporations.

"If the sale of this souvenir book be legal, would not the sale of any other political novelty or ornament priced exorbitantly be legal?" Snell asked. Previously, in the course of his letter he had said:

"In my judgment, the evidence which has come to me indicates clearly that the sale of this book is an illegal device to escape the penalties of the corrupt practices act, which expressly forbids contributions by corporations to political committees."

Snell told Cummings he would like to hear from Cummings before presentation of his, Snell's, evidence on the subject to a House committee now considering his resolution for a Congressional investigation.

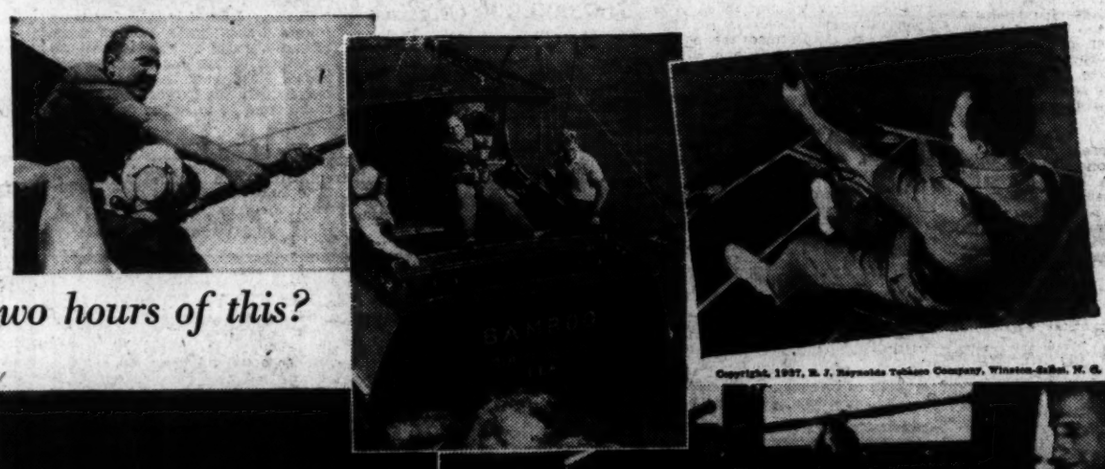
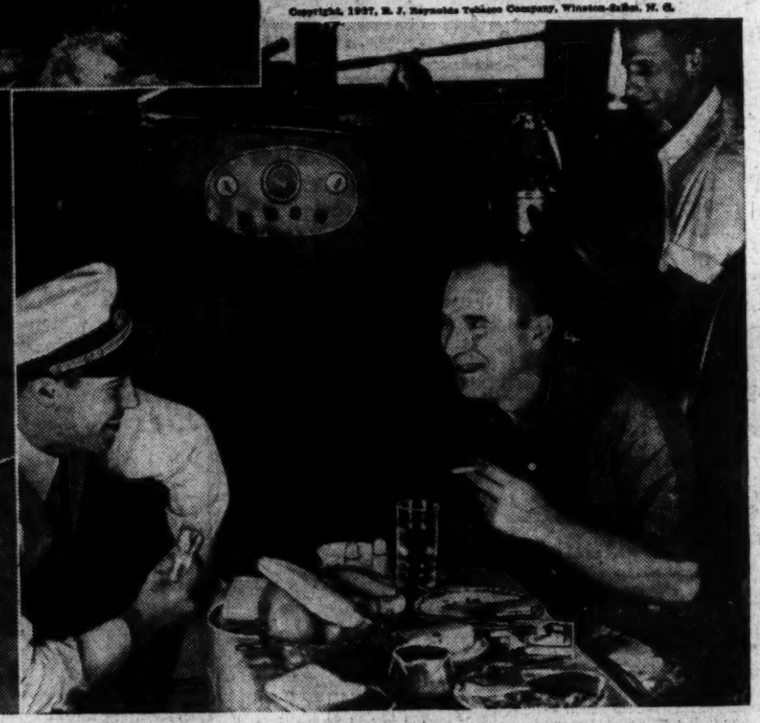
The battle is on—Erl Roman, famous sportsman, vs. 600 lbs. of savage, fighting blue marlin!

How would your nerves stand up to two hours of this?



Copyright, 1937, R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, Winston-Salem, N. C.

ERL ROMAN LANDS A BIG ONE!

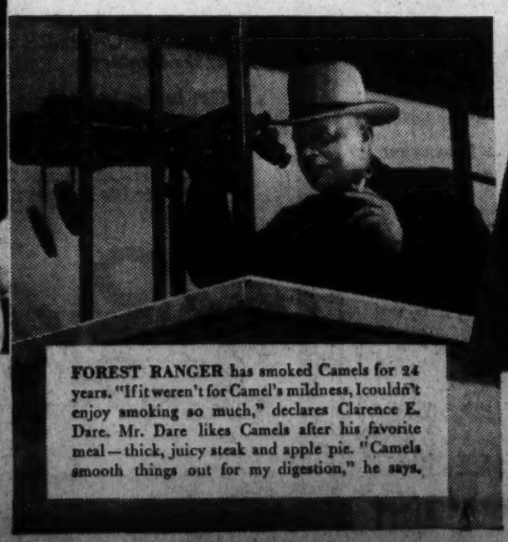


AS the Miami, Florida, "Herald" said of Erl Roman's titanic struggle with the big fish (above): "The battle was tough. Erl had his hands full staying in the fishing chair." But a sporting spirit and healthy nerves kept Roman going. After a 2-hour fight, he landed the second-largest blue marlin ever taken on rod and reel. Mr. Roman, a game angler, considers Camel the preferable cigarette for steady smoking. "Healthy nerves are necessary for keeping on top of things. Camels don't get on my nerves," Erl says. Above, right, Mr. Roman enjoys good digestion and a Camel after his tense fight. "I make it a point," he says, "to smoke Camels with my meals and after 'for digestion's sake.'"

Smooth Blending of Costly Tobaccos. Camels are made from costlier tobaccos, in a matchless blend. A mild, fine-flavored cigarette for steady smoking that does not rasp the throat or upset the nerves.

AQUAPLANE EXPERT. Miss Gloria Wheeden is a typical American outdoor girl. "Yes, I smoke," she says. "Like all my crowd, I enjoy Camels—especially at mealtimes. I give my appetite full rein—smoke Camels—and enjoy a sense of well-being."

"WHEN I'M TIRED after a match or need extra energy, Camels give me an invigorating 'lift' in energy," says Joanna de Tuscan, U. S. Women's Foils Champion. "Camels are so mild and delicate I smoke often, but Camels do not make my throat rough or harsh."



FOREST RANGER has smoked Camels for 24 years. "If it weren't for Camel's mildness, I couldn't enjoy smoking so much," declares Clarence E. Dare. Mr. Dare likes Camels after his favorite meal—thick, juicy steak and apple pie. "Camels smooth things out for my digestion," he says.

Republic Asks Court to Limit C. I. O. Pickets

Cleveland Hearing Today; Strikers Blame Riot on Company 'Thugs.'

Cleveland, July 27 (AP).—Republic Steel Corporation went to court today in an effort to limit picketing in the riot-torn district fronting its Corrigan-McKinney plant. The C. I. O. responded it would show "paid agents and hired thugs" of the company were responsible for "all of the trouble last night."

Republic, the Nation's third largest steel producer, asked the common pleas court to fix the number of pickets at each plant entrance, and demanded an injunction against intereference with workers.

Chief Justice Homer G. Powell, over the objections of C. I. O. counsel, ordered a hearing tomorrow. At the same time B. J. Damich, who as regional director of the C. I. O. steel union is a defendant, requested an investigation by the Senate Civil Liberties Committee. He said:

"All of the trouble last night was instigated by paid agents and hired thugs of Republic Steel. This will be proven during trial of the injunction suit here."

Mayor Harold H. Burton visited union headquarters near the steel plant to examine the damage from a four-hour fight between strikers and workers in which more than 80 persons suffered injuries requiring hospital treatment.

Afterward Mayor Burton met a C. I. O. committee and forwarded to Republic Steel a request that it hire no out-of-State workers and that it give him a complete report on circumstances leading to the attack on the union soup kitchen.

Al Balint, C. I. O. organizer, told the mayor 200 "company" men made the attack. He said it was "planned by Republic Steel Corporation as an excuse to bring the National Guard back to protect scabs." Guardsmen were withdrawn soon after Republic reopened its four plants here July 6 without violence.

"When your men start hurling rocks at cars, you go too far," Mayor Burton admonished the C. I. O. committee.

"All the rock throwing was not done by our people," Balint replied. "Republic workers were trying to stir up trouble."

Witnesses said approximately 500 workers came out of the plant at one time and set on a crowd of 100 pickets. H. B. Carpenter, Republic superintendent, explained:

"The men got sore at the strikers. We just couldn't keep them in the plant. The windows on nearly all the cars that entered the plant yesterday were smashed."

A crowd estimated by Police Capt. John Savage at from 2,000 to 3,000 strikers and strike sympathizers, who remained near the plant all day Monday, continued nearby most of the time today. Approximately 100 policemen remained on the scene.

With police concentrated at the steel mill, vandalism went almost unchecked in other sections of the city.

Jars of paint were thrown into the homes of four nonstriking knitting mill workers. A bomb did $5,000 damage to the meat market of Ralph Peters, a State's witness in an extortion case against Harry Wayne, Kosher Butchers Union agent, convicted of collecting money for "protection."

Black Legion Head Reported in N. Y.; Tip Proves False

New York, July 27 (AP).—A report that Virgil F. Bert) Effinger, reputed head of the Black Legion and fugitive from justice, was working here caused a flurry of excitement in the police department today.

Assistant Chief Inspector John A. Lyons said requests for Effinger arrest had come from Detroit, Mich., and Columbus, Ohio, after tips Effinger was employed by a local contractor.

The man, reported to be Effinger, was investigated but his identity was established quickly.

Effinger, identified at trials in Detroit as commander of the Black Legion, has been sought since last August 25.

2 Unionists Rehired By Security Board

Two members of the Baltimore office of the Social Security Board, dismissed in May, causing a subsequent cry of union discrimination from the S. S. B. employes union, have been reinstated, it was announced yesterday at the national office of the United Federal Workers of America.

The men are Harvey Hochman and David Schutzberger. Reinstatement followed a hearing before Joseph L. Fay, chief of operations in the Baltimore office. This leaves two cases pending from the original six that involved dismissed employes and charges of union discrimination. These cases, concerning Bernard Schultz and William Sumpf, are expected to be heard by an arbitrator to be appointed by the National Labor Relations Board.

"The camera brings out every detail," she complained. "It unmasks everything except your thoughts."

Note the upraised club of a strike sympathizer, while another speeds after a victim out of camera range. His face cut and bleeding, another victim (right), is shown being loaded into an automobile for transportation to a hospital. All available police were massed in the area, but were unable to stop guerrila warfare as strikers clashed with nonstrikers leaving the plant when their work was done.

NLRB Actions Are Defended By Roosevelt

The National Labor Relations Board, under attack recently on the grounds of partiality, found a defender in President Roosevelt yesterday.

The President said at a press conference that inasmuch as complaints have come from both sides, he felt that the situation was a pretty fair one.

Last Thursday, Senator Nye (Republican), North Dakota, declared the board is so biased in favor of John L. Lewis' C. I. O. "that the average man regards it as an adjunct."

On Monday, Representative Rankin (Democrat), Mississippi, charged the board's agents have conspired with communistic elements to destroy Southern industries.

Gen. Hugh L. Johnson, former NRA head, has termed the board a one-sided "pressure" group, which he held unsuited for its quasi-judicial work.

However, President Roosevelt told reporters that some of the labor people have complained the board was leaning over backward against them. He considered the criticism from both sides as indicating the N. L. R. B. is pursuing a fair course.

Asked for his view on amending the Wagner labor relations act to make labor unions responsible for maintaining signed agreements, the President advised reporters to read the British law, which provides for registration of unions. He said the English had a pretty good system, though he added he did not mean that this country should adopt it in toto.

The British act does not provide incorporation of unions, but the President expressed the view it provides a fair degree of mutual responsibility.

Declaring that there have been many cases of employes breaking agreements with labor, he said he did not consider the Wagner act lopsided.

Rankin was a White House visitor yesterday but did not discuss the labor board with the President. He said he might take it up later. In his Monday statement he said he would ask the President to remove members of the board.

Business Output Declines for June

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Reserve Board reported yesterday its barometer of industrial production swung downward during June, largely because of strikes in steel mills.

The index, which allows for seasonal influences and is based on the 1923-25 average, stood at 115 for the month, compared with 118 in the preceding three months. The June figure, however, was 11 points over the same month last year.

The general level of wholesale commodity prices, which had declined gradually from early April to mid-June, advanced in the latter part of June.

Clean False Teeth New, Magic Way

No Brushing—Yet Polished Like New in Just A Few Minutes!

Dental science has now found the ideal way to clean plates and removable bridges. All you do is place them in a small glass of water and add a little Polident powder. You can actually see the stains, tarnish and foul deposits dissolve right before your eyes. And Polident is absolutely harmless. It is made by the famous Wernet Laboratories and is approved by Good Housekeeping Bureau and other leading authorities.

In a few minutes your plate is sweet and clean—purified and hygienic. Gums lose that false look—and appear more live and natural. Polident costs only 30 cents at any drug store for a long-lasting supply. —Adv.

'Rats Never Worry Me,' Mayor Warns Enemies

Philadelphia, July 27 (AP).—Mayor S. Davis Wilson assigned extra police guards at his home today and charged an attempt was being made to link members of his administration with a distribution of gambling protection money. Threats have been made against him, the mayor said, but added the guards were called to protect his family.

"I am not afraid of those who made the threats," he said. "Rats never worry me."

Wage-Hour Bill Faced by Flood Of Revisions

fering with any wage-hour agreement negotiated by a labor union.

Appointment of the five members of the proposed board on a geographic basis was approved by the committee. Mrs. Norton said final committee action was possible by the end of the week. She said passage this session depends on adjournment plans.

In the Senate, Senator Black had hardly embarked on an exposition of his bill before Senate Minority Leader Charles L. McNary proposed the first amendments, to exempt workers employed for less than six months in fish, fruit and vegetable packing from the bill. On suggestion from Senator Walsh (Democrat), Massachusetts, McNary indicated he may ask the exemption only from hours provisions of the bill.

Proposal that child labor be deleted from the bill was made by Senator Johnson (Democrat), of Colorado, co-author with Senator Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, of an independent child-labor measure. Both Johnson and Wheeler told the Senate their measure prohibiting child labor under 16 in interstate commerce would more effectively solve the question. Their bill provides alternative methods of enforcement, to insure constitutionality.

A substitute bill was offered by Senator Francis T. Maloney (Democrat), Connecticut, calling for an unemployment census. A sliding hours scale was proposed, based on the number of unemployed.

Black, in his speech for the bill, directed his discussions to conditions in his own South, from which major opposition to the bill stems. He said "pauper wages" were not limited to any one section, and declared "this bill recognizes it would be completely impossible to level up the wage standards of the Nation over night."

First opposition speeches from Southern Senators are expected today.

Jesting House Votes Six Aides For President

gan, supported Knutson's amendment.

Representative Donald McLean (Republican), New Jersey, attempted to tag on the bill a constitutional amendment limiting the President's White House incumbency to one six-year term. This was held to be not germane to the bill.

Also considered not germane was an amendment by Representative Ross Collins (Democrat) Mississippi, which would have allowed House members to add another secretary to their own staffs, at a salary not to exceed $3,900.

Few voices could penetrate the constant din from the floor, where members were joking throughout the chamber, until Representative Dewey Short (Republican), Missouri, took the floor to threaten that unless he were granted more speaking time he would introduce an amendment to require the President to "name as his six appointees his three sons, John, Elliott and Franklin, jr.; his daughter, Mrs. Anna Roosevelt Boettiger, and her children, 'Sistie' and 'Buzzie' Dall."

"The only thing that might disqualify them is their lack of passion for anonymity," shouted Short as the galleries roared.

"Let's go home. We've had enough change and reforms."

Representative John J. Cochran (Democrat), Missouri, jumped to the Administration's defense, declaring "I don't know Corcoran nor Cohen, but I think the country would be better off if we had more of them."

Then Representative Lloyd Thurston (Republican), Iowa, rose to say: "There is a supreme piece of humor in the report on this bill—those words about persons with a 'passion for anonymity.' I've never heard anyone suggest the President himself had a passion for anonymity."

After the initial introductory speech of Representative J. Will Robinson (Democrat), Utah, in charge of the bill, two of the majority's biggest siege guns in the House took over the defense of the measure—Representatives Lindsay Warren, of North Carolina, and Fred Vinson, of Kentucky.

Indefatigably, Warren and Vinson answered the happy-go-lucky onslaughts on the bill, their attitude that of weary men brushing away annoying but unimportant flies. Certain in the knowledge that the bill would be passed before dinner time, they answered only the more outrageous suggestions of the Republicans, and sat most of the time like patient elders smiling tolerantly at the antics of the young.

Platinum, Bleak Alaskan City Of Tents, Finds Riches Growing

Prospects for Production in Coming Year So Excellent, 'Stampeders' Hope to Upset the World Market.

Platinum, Alaska, July 27 (AP).—Platinum has built a bustling town of tents and logs on this bleak stretch of coast and its mounting production brought predictions today it soon would become the center of one of the world's richest fields.

E. A. Rasmunson, president of the Bank of Alaska at Anchorage, predicted "tremendous" production of platinum by 1939 and said it might upset the world market. Platinum sells for $50 an ounce.

George Campbell of Anchorage, witnessing the run of fortune seekers, said the district held the possibility of taking front rank in world production.

In 1934 the Alaska production was worth only $84,600. It jumped to $264,000 in 1935 and to $312,000 in 1936. Much of the 1936 yield came from the new field. Rasmunson said production this year would be "much larger."

The Goodnews Bay Co., which obtained a $550,000 RFC loan, is bringing dredge equipment here and another big project is the Clara Platinum Production Co. Airplanes, only quick transportation in this country of no roads, have brought in heavy equipment as well as scores of stampeders.

Capt. Peter Wold established a trading post here four years ago. Now the town has a rutted, muddy main street ostentatiously named "Platinum Boulevard." Even the townsite is staked as mining claims.

Every few days word of a new "strike" starts a rush of stampeders. But some mining men, advising fortune seekers to stay away, say no important new finds have been made this year.

The town is no pleasure resort. The wind blows always. In 1934 the camp had only three rainless days.

Tammany Is Still Behind Copeland

New York, July 27 (AP).—Tammany Hall remained outwardly united behind Senator Royal S. Copeland for mayor tonight despite the death yesterday of his principal backer, James J. Dooling.

Dooling's death generally was regarded as solidifying the sink-or-swim-with-Copeland status of Democratic factions which the Tammany leader mustered around the anti-New Deal standard only a few days ago.

Plans for naming a steering committee to lead Tammany Hall until Dooling's successor is chosen, probably after the election, remained unannounced.

Nazi Police Free Young Niemoeller

Berlin, July 27 (AP).—The Rev. Wilhelm Niemoeller, younger brother of the Rev. Martin Niemoeller, leader of the Protestant opposition to Nazi domination of the church, was released by secret police yesterday after 30 hours in jail.

He attended evening service at his brother's Dahlem Church but did not preach.

The Rev. Martin Niemoeller still is in jail. He was arrested on July 1 on charges of inciting to disobedience. His brother came to Dahlem from Bielefeld to occupy his pulpit shortly thereafter, and was arrested.

Navy Training For Boys Aim Of Roosevelt

training station and back. However, there would be no pay.

The idea is that a trained reserve shall be developed, which, in time of war, would fit into a definite place in the Navy organization.

The present reserve strength of the Navy is far below 100,000. The President's plan would call for a start on a small scale, to be extended gradually. It would be entirely different from the present system of training future officers. An entirely different age group would be given an opportunity, during the summer holiday, to spend six weeks in profitable training without cost.

In the first period a youth would go to one of the naval training stations on the Pacific Coast, the Great Lakes or the Atlantic Coast for preliminary and rudimentary training. In the second summer he would be permitted to specialize in the line of work he was most interested in, small-boat engines, large engines, deck duty or any other line of activity he might prefer or in which he became most proficient. The second course would be followed by a training cruise.

THE THIRD OF EIGHT REASONS WHY . . .

The Washington Post Grows

THE SPEED of a newspaper's growth is dependent upon its ability to know what its readers want and to give those readers the best of everything that must go into the production of an outstanding publication. Almost every one knows that THE WASHINGTON POST has doubled its circulation in less than four years. This was no accident. The reasons why are interesting. And the purpose of this series of chats with readers is simply to tell how it was done.

NO. 3—SOCIETY, WOMAN'S PAGES

WHETHER IT WAS considered "unladylike" or not, no one can be certain . . . but, previous to the middle of the last century, very few women ever read newspapers. And it certainly was considered "unladylike" for a woman to work on one. In 1834, one Ann Oddbody started a paper in New York called "Woman." Its career ended so quickly that no copies of the paper survived. Next, came the "Ladies Morning Star," in 1836. It existed for three months and then quietly died. Merchants vigorously protested spending money for advertising in a paper aimed exclusively at women! But Horace Greeley saw the handwriting on the wall and, in the early 1840's, persuaded the famous Margaret Fuller to write for his Tribune. She was probably the first really distinguished woman to write regular articles for an American newspaper. The idea caught on. Jenny June and Fanny Fern brought women's problems right out into the light of day with their sob stories, menu columns, fashion articles and beauty hints. Following them, came the "stunt writers," most famous, Nellie Bly, who raced around the world . . . a la Phineas Fogg . . . in 72 days, 6 hours and 11 minutes for the New York Herald in 1889, much to the amazement of the world, in general, and America, in particular. After that, there was an avalanche of girls, willing to risk their necks to crash the newspapers. But such antics are no longer necessary. Today, there are more than 12,000 woman editors, feature writers and reporters turning out daily material for an America that probably has as many women reading newspapers . . . regularly and with as great an interest . . . as men.

THE WASHINGTON POST, day in and day out, seven mornings a week, brings to its 100,000 readers the most interesting, the best-balanced women's pages of the day.

SOCIETY EDITOR . . .

UNDER THE DIRECTION of Hope Ridings Miller, the Society Pages of The Post are built each day to tell the complete story of the social activities of a city that is second to none in the importance of its society events. Her staff of reporters and writers covers the endless round of weddings, receptions, teas, engagements and coming-out parties that help to make Washington one of the gayest cities in the world.

WOMAN'S PAGE EDITOR . . .

CHARACTERIZED in a recent book on "Ladies of the Press" by Ishbel Ross as "one of the best newspaper women in the country," Malvina Lindsay is the Editor of The Post's Woman's Page. Hers is the duty of directing a staff that will produce, each day, the most interesting, most useful, most readable material available for the thousands of Washington women who turn to it each morning.

"DEAR MARY HAWORTH" . .

MARY HAWORTH conducts a daily and Sunday column, appearing on the Woman's Page of The Washington Post and dealing with the multiple personal problems of her correspondents. Letters to Mary Haworth are printed each day, together with Miss Haworth's answers to the questions asked.

WOMEN'S CLUBS . . .

JESSIE ASH ARNDT, The Post's Club Editor, chronicles the activities of Washington's thousands of clubwomen. Her articles, dealing with club events and club personalities, appear both daily and Sunday on the Society Pages of The Washington Post.

FOOD, HER SPECIALTY . .

REBEKAH BLAKE'S responsibilities as Food Editor of The Post keep her busy seven days a week arranging menus, describing new dishes and their preparation, intricate and simple secrets of culinary art for hungry D. C. residents and their particular palates.

SHE WRITES ON STYLE . . .

ETHEL EHLEN, intimately familiar with the Nation's leading designers and stylists, their work and their workshops . . . to which, in New York, she makes frequent visits . . keeps Washington women abreast and ahead of events in the important world of women's clothes with her daily and Sunday articles in The Post.

DUDLEY HARMON, interviewer of and reporter among society folk of the Nation's Capital, is a familiar face at ambassadorial teas, state receptions, debuts and weddings throughout the year. Betty Beale, another member of The Post's society page staff, is author of "TOP HATS AND TIARAS," a weekly column featured on the Society Pages of The Washington Post every Sunday.

SOCIETY COLUMNIST . . .

SOCIETY WRITER . . .

HELEN von EBBIGHAUSEN'S work in The Washington Post's society department keeps her on the trail of society news outside of the District of Columbia proper, and includes layout of society pages in both daily and Sunday editions.

2 D. C. Officers Stand Guard in Peiping Crisis

Maj. Denham and Second Lieut. Ramsey in Force of 516.

seph C. Burger, 60 Linden avenue, Cherrydale, Va., and Capt. Robert Luckey, of Hyattsville, Md.

Maj. Denham entered the Marine Corps in 1917, and served overseas in the Meuse-Argonne offensive during the World War. He returned in 1919 and was immediately sent to Haiti, to which he returned, after serving at various posts throughout the United States, in 1932. He sailed with Mrs. Denham for China last March, and has been on duty in the embassy quarter since the middle of April.

Lieut. Ramsey graduated from the Naval Academy in 1934, and, upon entering the Marine Corps, was immediately sent to the Marine Basic School, Navy Yard, Philadelphia. After a short tour of duty at San Diego, Calif., Lieut. Ramsey sailed for China about a year and a half ago. He is attached to the mounted detachment of the legation guard in Peiping.

The commander of the legation guard at Peiping, quiet, affable Col. John Marston, served prior to his assignment to Peiping as personnel officer of the Marine Corps in Washington for three years.

Bearing little resemblance to a hardboiled "leatherneck," especially when wearing civilian clothes, Col. Marston is noted as a strict disciplinarian. Under him at the Chinese post serve 23 officers and 493 men.

He has had ample experience for the kind of work which now faces him in the Chinese city. From 1916 until 1918 he served as an inspector in the Haitian Guard, and from 1929 until 1931 served in the Nicaraguan Guardia. He was awarded the Nicaraguan medal of Merit in 1930.

Following is a list of officers of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on duty in Peiping:

Naval attache, Commander Harvey S. Overesch, Lafayette, Ind.

The following comprise the marine detachment at the American Embassy:

Col. John Marston, commanding, Merion Station, Montgomery County, Pa.

Lieut. Col. William C. James, Summerton, S. C.

Maj. James L. Denham, 1324 Monroe street, Washington, D. C.

Maj. Edward G. Hagen, Cranford, N. J.

Maj. Leonard E. Rea, 15 Morris street, Auburn, N. Y.

Capt. John A. Bemis, Belt, Mont.

Capt. Evans F. Carlson, Oakland, Calif.

Capt. Samuel B. Griffith, 6615 Darlington road, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Capt. John F. Hough, 3636 Thirtieth street, Mount Rainer, Md.

Capt. Joseph C. Burgher, 60 Linden avenue, Cherrydale, Va.

Capt. John S. Letcher, 4 Letcher avenue, Lexington, Va.

Capt. Robrt B. Luckey, Hyattsville, Md.

First Lieut. Wilbur J. McNenny, Spearfish, S. Dak.

First Lieut. Thomas J. Colley, 399 Park avenue, Blasdell, N. Y.

Second Lieut. Frederick A. Ramsey, jr., 3642 Jocelyn street northwest, Washington, D. C.

Second Lieut. William N. McGill, 845 Ralston street, Reno, Nev.

Second Lieut. DeWolf Schatzel, 415 Lawrence street, Sandusky, Ohio.

Second Lieut. Stanley W. Trachta, Oilmont, Mont.

Second Lieut. Thornton M. Hinkle, 2150 Grandin road, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Second Lieut. William J. Van Ryzin, 525 West Packard street, Appleton, Wis.

Chef Pay Clerk George W. Stahl, Lancaster, Pa.

Marine Gunner Harry P. Crowe, 618 Pennsylvania avenue, Bremerton, Wash.

Commander Ruskin M. Lhamon (C. Q.), 3339 West Seventh street, Los Angeles, Calif.

Lieut. Comdr. Edward P. Kunkel, Jasper, Ind.

Lieut. Comdr. Adolphus R. Gleitsman, Somerville, Mass.

WPA Agrees to Help Annapolis Playspots

Annapolis, Md., July 27 (AP).—Playgrounds for Annapolis and its suburbs were assured today through a contract agreed upon between WPA authorities and the Greater Annapolis Recreation Association.

Joseph J. Maisch, assistant director, division of education and recreation of the WPA, agreed to provide 16 paid supervisors for the city and its environs. The contract was signed by Walter H. Wooding, president of the recreation association. It followed an appropriation of $1,000 made by the city council to provide equipment for playgrounds.

List of Virginians.

The State Department announced a list of Virginians as registered with the department, residing in Peiping. They include Joseph O. Berger and wife and son, Joseph, jr., 2100 North Randolph street, Arlington; Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Oliver Kern and son, Donald Michel, Newport News; Mr. and Mrs. Glenn O. Seider and daughter, Betty Lou, 1300 Holladay street, Portsmouth; William Andrews Staley and wife and son, William Barrett, 211 Fourtenth street, Charlottesville; Genevieve Trainham, care Wirt Trainham, jr., Marshal; Mr. and Mrs. Alexander A. Peiping Battle Opens; Marines Guard 4 Gates sources said defense garrisons manned the walls of the International Legation quarter, in which the American and other embassies are located, as the sound of conflict carried into the city.

Ancient City Prepares for Seige as Japanese Attack Sung's Army.

Chinese military headquarters in Nanking stated Japanese forces attacked Peiping shortly before midnight last night, the conflict apparently being precipitated by Chinese rejection of additional Japanese demands which the Japanese considered tantamount to rejection of ultimatums calling for Chinese troops' withdrawals from Peiping and west of Peiping.

The Chinese reports said the new fighting started at Nanyuan, south of Peiping, where is was "especially severe."

The Domei (Japanese) News Agency declared Nanyuan was "completely isolated." A battle also was waged at Nanyuan earlier Tuesday.

Chinese dispatches said, in addition, that fighting had started at Tungchow, east of Peiping. It was there that Japanese reports yesterday said 500 Chinese troops had been "annihilated." Military officials in Nanking stated the Japanese attacked Chinese troops with air bombs and machine gun fire and that only a few Chinese survived.

With telegrams from Peiping being delayed for hours and only one radio station operating, news came in roundabout fashion.

By the Associated Press.

Peiping, July 27.—Peiping prepared tonight for any eventuality at the zero hour set by the Japanese for evacuation of Chinese troops.

The international legation quarter took on the aspect of siege as United States Marines made ready sandbag fortifications to protect the four gates to which they are assigned, and precautions were taken by other foreigners.

The Japanese gave the Chinese until noon tomorrow (11 p. m. Eastern standard time Tuesday) to withdraw units of the Thirty-seventh Division of the Chinese Twenninth Army in the Peiping, or West Barracks Garrison, to the west bank of the Yungting River.

Ultimatums Rejected.

Another ultimatum gave the Chinese until noon today to evacuate to the south those units of the division in the area west of Peiping near which the conflict first broke out July 7 in a clash during Japanese night maneuvers.

The Central News Agency said the Chinese announced officially rejection of both ultimatums tonight.

A Japanese spokesman indicated minor action might be expected tonight in the area west of here because of the Chinese failure to withdraw, but warned that "a grave crisis" would result unless the demand in the second ultimatum was met tomorrow.

Rumors spread that the Japanese had threatened to bomb Peiping if Chinese troops failed to withdraw, but other reports declared Japan had assured the representatives of other powers such measures would not be taken.

Death Note Writer Admits Guilt Here

Pleading guilty to sending a death threat through the mails to Mrs. Henry G. Hanford and her son, S. J. Hanford, Earl William Gott yesterday in District Court heard his case referred to the probation officer for a report before he is sentenced by Justice Oscar R. Luhring.

Gott, a 22-year-old itinerant, admitted he mailed Mrs. Hanford a demand for $1,000. He ordered the money given the doorman of the Ambassador Hotel. He called, got a dummy package and was trailed into a park, where he was arrested.

Gott may be sentenced before the week is out.

Strikers Enjoined.

Chicago, July 27 (AP).—Federal Judge Walter C. Lindley granted the Bike-Web Manufacturing Co. a temporary injunction today restraining strikers at the South Bend, Ind., plant from mass picketing and violence.

Cleric Expires Doing 'The Dead Man Float'

Long Beach, Calif., July 27 (AP).—"This," said the Rev. George Long, 65, "is how you do the 'dead man float.'"

The demonstration in 3 feet of water seemed a bit too real to the group of small boys who were being entertained by the minister. A life guard and an inhalator squad was called, but the minister was dead. An examining physician said death was due to natural causes.

Other oils go draining back down to the crankcase, but this patent Germ Processed oil leaves a rich, slippy layer of lubricant strongly plated all over the insides of the engine. That's Oil-Plating. It doesn't get used up like just some thin spray of oil. It can't leave "dry spots" because it can't drain off. No matter if your engine is stopped, or if it's making time, it stays 100% Oil-Plated. The Cup Comes Back.

Just a decade after France took it across the ocean the Davis Cup, symbol of international tennis supremacy, returns to the United States. For six of those 10 years it has rested in Paris; for the last four in London. Yesterday, on the famous center court at Wimbledon, Princess Helena Victoria presented it to Walter Pate, the American captain, for transportation to the land of its donor.

With the exception of the war years the famous trophy has been fought for anually since 1900. In that distant year the contest was virtually limited to the English-speaking countries. Now some two-score nations enter the lists each summer and the eliminations proceed by zones. There is thus a dual culmination:—between the winners in the American (including the Asiatic and European) zones and then between the interzone champion and the nation holding the cup.

In these 32 annual competitions the United States holds the edge. This country has now won the cup 11 times as against nine victories for Great Britain and six each for Australia and France.

Moreover, one or another of these nations has habitually been the loser in the challenge round. Belgium was the challenger back in 1904 and Japan in 1921. Otherwise the four countries named have been the runners-up when they were not winners. This year, however, Germany lost in the interzone final by the narrowest margin, and would undoubtedly have conquered Britain had she been able first to dispose of the strong American team.

Dwight F. Davis, former Secretary of War and fine sportsman in the best sense of the word, may properly be proud of the association of his name with the famous trophy. No other form of international competition has aroused a healthier interest, none has done more to advance goodwill between the contestants than has the Davis Cup.

America is proud that the cup is returning to these shores. But we shall relinquish it gladly, as we have before, whenever another nation proves that it has a better claim to world leadership in this field of human endeavor.

Adjusting The Tax Bills.

In many respects the tax bills now in conference are the most important local measures that have demanded Congressional attention in recent years. As the Board of Trade has pointed out, the final bill will substantially increase the burden on local taxpayers in any event. Moreover, it may notably affect the economic welfare and orderly growth of the community.

Certainly a measure of this sort is entitled to the most careful analysis. An especially heavy responsibility has been thrown upon the conference committee because of the sharp disagreement between the Senate and House. In consequence the committee must virtually write a new tax bill. If it chooses the best features of both the House and Senate measures, it may give the District a new revenue system that will serve for many years. But it also has ample opportunity to devise a compromise that would soon prove intolerable.

When the measure was before the House it unfortunately engendered emotions, prejudices and more than a trace of hysteria. It goes without saying that such feelings should be banished from the conference room. The task there will be simply to combine the best features of the two bills in the way that will most effectively serve the interests of the District.

There is general agreement among Washingtonians, for example, that the Senate should abandon its oppressive special tax on land. Too much of the tax burden is already heaped upon the home-owner. On the other hand, the income tax in the Senate bill would doubtless prove more satisfactory as a permanent source of revenue than the business privilege tax in the House bill. Nor can the House have any reasonable objections to the income tax, as such, in view of its intensive use by the Federal Government. If the two proposed levies are considered on their merits, therefore, the conferees will probably accept the income tax alternative.

One of the most important tasks of the committee will be to adjust the bills to the District's actual needs. In their present form both measures would raise more money than is necessary to wipe out the prospective deficit. When such drastic increases are being made in local taxes there can be no sound argument for piling up a surplus that would encourage Congress in future sessions further to reduce its contribution to the Capital City.

Moreover, careful attention to the details of both measures is needed. Both were extensively, and in some cases carelessly, amended during their consideration on the floors of the House and Senate. There is, for example, considerable confusion as to the extent of the proposed levy on incomes. Before the bill emerges from committee it should be clarified, as well as adjusted to the actual revenue needs of the District.

Limiting Train Lengths.

In the form of an amendment to the Interstate Commerce act, the Senate has passed a bill limiting the number of cars in freight trains to 70.

Advocates of the measure urged its adoption as a safety device, although it was originally pressed by the rail unions as a means of spreading employment. However, there is no convincing evidence that the frequency of accidents to employes of the roads bears any direct relation to the length of trains. Indeed during the decade prior to 1933, the number of accidents declined sharply despite the contemporaneous increases in train lengths.

In any case, if and when it becomes necessary to limit train lengths, in the interest in safety, the I. C. C. is the logical agency to decide what those limits should be. Congress is clearly trenching upon the administrative domain in this legislation. It should go no further than to authorize the commission to take action at its discretion, if it lacks that power under existing laws. Congress cannot be expected to legislate intelligently about such technical matters as the proper length of trains, and the fact that the I. C. C. failed to respond to requests for an opinion upon the bill that has just passed the Senate engenders a strong suspicion that the regulatory authorities do not consider it essential.

If the train length bill cannot be justified as an essential safety device, it becomes a thoroughly indefensible proposal in view of the additional burden it would impose upon the railroads. The Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce reported that the roads estimated the increase in operating costs involved at from $150,000,000 to $237,000,000, without allowing for the indirect cost resulting from the necessity of scrapping equipment and facilities now used to accommodate the longer trains.

Although these estimates are challenged as being too high, it is generally conceded that the cost of the change would be substantial. While there is some support for the bill on the ground that it would mean quicker transportation of freight, many groups of shippers are opposing it for fear the result would be increased freight rates.

The roads are already severely handicapped by increasing costs of operation, due to wage advances, pension payments, higher material costs and, above all, to the pressure of rival transportation agencies in both the freight and passenger fields. Diversion of business to competitors has been assisted by discriminatory regulatory requirements that do not apply equally to the highway and waterway carriers. The latter have the further advantage of enjoying the use of road and waterway facilities provided at the expense of the taxpayer.

Every additional expense imposed upon the rail carriers by regulatory laws not affecting competing transport agencies increases the threat of Government ownership. And the fallacy of that outcome is revealed by present conditions in France, where governmental subsidies to the nationalized railroads are an important factor in the present financial crisis.

The Souvenir Book.

In spite of Congress' well known love of investigations, that body is slow to take the bait which Representative Snell and the New York Times have made so enticing. Mr. Snell thinks that the sale of Democratic National Convention souvenir books at fabulous prices to numerous corporations would make an excellent study. Apparently the Times thinks so, too, for it is doing a special piece of research to determine what became of these high-priced volumes. But Congress is not yet convinced.

Of course, these books were "sold" under the assumption that corporations and wealthy individuals would be delighted to pay $250 for a copy of the Philadelphia convention program, elegantly bound and decorated by the President's signature. As a side interest, the scheme was designed to reduce the $850,000 deficit resulting from President Roosevelt's 1936 campaign. But that was incidental. For the law forbids corporations to contribute to campaign funds.

No doubt the Democratic National Committee thought the books would be treasured as valuable souvenirs. But the Times has discovered that many corporations paid their money without having the books delivered. Some executives had the costly volume sent to their cousins and nieces. In other cases, it seems, the books were finally given to the rubbish man.

These findings suggest that some "economic royalists" succumbed to unscrupulous salesmen who had urged purchase of the books as "a judicious investment in the good-will of the Administration." Hard-fisted industrialists apparently sought to distort this historic and literary enterprise into a mere influence racket. Instead of accepting the book for its intrinsic value, they purchased it as a means of currying favor with the New Deal.

Charges that the corrupt practices act has been violated have so far failed to stir Congress. But the research is not yet over. Evidently there is more of a story to it than appears in the souvenir book.

Zero Hour At Peiping.

So serious is the situation at Peiping that American marines, preparing for all possible eventualities, are piling up sandbag fortifications along the gates of the international legation quarter.

There are some 1,400 Americans endangered. Their presence, and the presence in the former Chinese capital of American marines, shows how hollow is the assertion that the present difficulties between China and Japan are not our concern. On the contrary, we have a vital stake in that situation and cannot view with any degree of equanimity the steady drift of those two nations toward war.

In his speech before the special session of the Imperial Diet Koki Hirota, the Japanese foreign minister, declared that his government's policy "is directed toward the realization of stability in Eastern Asia through conciliation and co-operation between Japan, Manchukuo and China and by stopping the Communist invasion of the Orient."

In themselves these are mild words. But their peacefulness is more apparent than real. The velvet glove covers a mailed fist. That co-operation which Mr. Hirota is urging is not co-operation between equals but between a nation that insists on enforcing its will upon another.

China can have peace, but only at Japan's price. If the Nanking government agrees to the withdrawal of all Chinese troops that the Japanese want removed; if it will agree, in effect, to the alienation of North China from the rest of the nation even as Manchuria and Inner Mongolia have been alienated, then the peace of the Far East will be preserved. That is, in substance, what Mr. Hirota has informed Nanking. But he also says, in effect, that the alternative to capitulation is war.

Despite hesitations and heart searchings arising out of a genuine desire to maintain that peace without which the great task of national reconstruction cannot be continued, the Nanking government has refused to capitulate. It is prepared to make terms with Japan, but not to accept terms presented at the point of a bayonet.

The temper of China today is sufficiently different from what it was in 1931, when the legions of the Mikado overran Manchuria and later made a shambles out of Chapei, as to make such capitulation politically dangerous. Divided though they may still be on other matters, the Chinese are now practically a unit in their opposition to that Japanese imperialism which has already subjugated so much Chinese territory.

The Chinese do not want to fight. If forced to take up arms in defense of an extremely valuable area which Japan covets they may get the worst of it. But the Sino-Japanese problem will not be solved through such truculent measures as Tokyo is now sponsoring within and without the walls of Peiping.

Every Little Bit Helps.

President Roosevelt's injunction to Representative Woodrum, of the House Appropriations Committee, to "go slow" in authorizing expenditures for new buildings provides fresh evidence of the sincerity of his desire to effect a speedy balancing of the budget.

To be sure, the amounts that can be saved by postponing construction of new public buildings are relatively insignificant compared with total projected expenditures. But progress toward budgetary balance has been slow chiefly because of the lack of will to push toward that goal. The President has now shown a new determination to overcome this shrinking from retrenchment, even though he has so far confined his efforts to comparatively minor economies. It takes considerable resolution to turn thumbs down on postoffices, and to suggest by indirection that the War Department and the Social Security Board remain in their present quarters a little longer.

These first efforts to impress upon a heedless Congress the importance of minor savings may pave the way for major economies to be achieved through elimination of non-essential activities and more economical administration of essential services. The expenditures for relief, for example, could be sharply curtailed if the WPA were to give place to a system of decentralized relief, requiring localities to assume full responsibility for care of their destitute, and adjusting Federal aid to local needs.

Departmental pruning and paring of appropriations already voted serve chiefly to impress upon the spending agencies of Government the importance of economy. It is a habit easily lost and hard to reacquire after years of trying to spend our way back to prosperity.

70 Years Of Canadian Democracy.

From the St. Louis Star-Times.

Coincident with the 150th anniversary of the Constitution this year is the seventieth anniversary celebration of America's northern sister democracy of Canada. For the latter, the British North America act of 1867 has served the purpose of the Constitution in the United States. By that historic paper the world empire of Britain took the first step toward changing into a commonwealth of virtually equal nations, and Canada acquired the republican status that brought it into harmony with our own political traditions.

President Roosevelt in greeting the Canadian nation has recalled the familiar incidents in the countries' joint history which have given the world an object-lesson in living at peace. Common European heritage, common appreciation of our geographic insulation from foreign quarrels and designs, mutual respect for each other, he pointed out, have been the happy guarantees of that peace.

Canadian democracy's seventieth birthday is an occasion for celebration on both sides of the unfortified border.

The High Cost of Slums.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I refer to your recent editorial on "The Revised Housing Bill," in which you feel the present measure contains only a "weak requirement" for slum abolition. This point of view follows a popular misconception in that, existing slum properties due to overcrowding, frequently take on improper and abnormally high prices.

It is therefore the part of wisdom first to drain these slums of their inhabitants by building new dwellings elsewhere which in turn will reduce land values on vacated sites. When this has been done, it is then the proper time, and not before, to acquire slum properties and to improve them with new housing. To insist unequivocally, by law, that low-rent housing shall only be built on cleared slum land, is more than likely to result in loading the program with excessive costs in the first few years of operation, and to add the possibility of high rents or subsidies for units built.

In his book on British and American Housing, Capt. R. L. Reiss, in reference to the first 12 years of English operations, states: "Only to a limited extent did the councils find it possible to clear slum areas during this period." Mayor LaGuardia, testifying recently before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor in regard to the present bill said: "When we talk about slum clearance, if the idea is to go in and tear down and build in its place a new type of building, with the area that we need, then you are going to find your land values very high." And this condition exists not only in New York, but wherever low-rent dwellings are scarce and overcrowding has resulted.

Those who are genuinely interested in the success of the pending measure should realize that while slum clearance is a desideratum of the first order, its attainment is best left to a rather slower process of evolution and opportunism at the hands of those in authority. Thus this method may seem laggard to those who believe "Rome" should have been "built in a day," even if it wasn't, but a careful study of the matter should also serve to convince the wise that the gradual process of slum elimination is really the best.

Books By Russians.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In reading a recent letter by Conrad M. Paine published in The Post, I wonder that in recommending books for those seeking to inform themselves in regard to what is actually taking place in Russia the writer mentions only foreign authors—Sidney and Beatrice Webb and Albert Rhys Williams—as authorities upon this subject.

Might I suggest for the benefit of those who are seeking true and accurate information as to Russian internal affairs, first "Escape From the Soviets," by Tatiana Tchernavin; and second, "I Speak for the Silent;" of which the author himself says: "I tell my own story because I believe that only in this way can I discharge the moral obligation which a kindly fate imposed upon me in helping me to escape from the Soviet terror—the duty to speak for those whose voices cannot be heard."

The authors of these two books are Russians who loved their country and asked nothing better than to serve her to the extreme limit of their abilities. S. M.

Pack The Senate?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the current issue of The Post I find a letter on "Close Decisions" by P. S. J., of Warrenton, Va., in which he discusses the Supreme Court issue and asks "Why not pack the Senate?"

If Mr. P. S. J. will just be patient the voters of the country will well attend to that the first time it comes before them.

Cuba's "Three Year Plan."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The social and economic co-ordination plan which under the name of the "Three Year Plan" was suggested by Col. Fulgencio Batista, chief of the Cuban army, has been the object of various and curious commentaries upon being published yesterday in Havana.

The Cuban Embassy limits itself to state that the Congress of the republic and cabinet are actually studying that plan in order to translate it into a body of practical, harmonious and comprehensive legislation.

Public opinion, once informed of the high social and economic objectives of the plan, has expressed itself in its favor, and the economic classes, directly interested in the reforms required by the plan, have readily expressed their good will to co-operate in the reconstruction of Cuba's economy.

The name "Three Year Plan" does not mean that it is to be realized within that brief period of time, but that it will be initiated in the next three years.

The term regimentation, freely employed when commenting on the plan, must be accepted with the greatest reserve, as may be seen from a study of the text of the plan's 20 points.

The Cuban Embassy emphatically denies that the announcement of the plan has thrown the country into confusion and bewilderment. The objectives of the plan have been explained in the press and over the radio for many weeks and the political and economic organizations of the island have discussed and approved those objectives.

To state that the realization of the plan supposes "a hope to curb political activity and maintain the governmental 'status quo' for at least three years," is simply absurd, because while different committees study its various legal aspects, Congress goes ahead preparing in detail the national election for delegates for the Constituent Assembly which will meet early next year.

The Cuban Embassy deems grave the false insinuation that the "three year plan" is based upon the elimination of foreign capital or that it will endanger present foreign investments in Cuba, and recommends to those interested in the social and economic movement to be inaugurated by the "three year plan" the careful study of its provisions before giving credit to such unfounded interpretations.

It is not, quoting the famous economist Russell, "a new Utopia to be floated at once with a promise of huge dividends of happiness." In the words of the great Irish writer, Cuba is simply trying to create a new social order to provide economic development, political stability and desirable social life. This can be done and will be done within the democratic frame which will be determined by the Cuban people through their delegates to the Constituent Assembly.

Upon announcing the "three year plan," Cuba is serving notice to the world that the period of readjustment through strife and sorrow happily closed, she is ready with the friendly co-operation of all countries, classes and interests, to create, for citizens and foreigners alike, a new order, a better economic co-ordination, a scientific and just exploitation of its national wealth and to accomplish slowly but surely, following the middle way, far from radicalism of Right or Left, the generous and human wishes of the greatest of her sons who dreamed of a Republic "with all and for the good of all."

Politics Above Merit.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir I notice in The Post of July 25, that Congressman Joseph W. Martin predicts the death of the merit system unless certain safeguards are insisted upon in the proposed reorganization of the Civil Service Commission. The vesting in the appointing officers the option of choice among three eligibles submitted to him is the sore spot of the civil service system. These appointing officers, being human and partisan, are apt to select the candidate of their own party and preference to the disadvantage of the less favored applicant.

The recent inclusion of third-class postmasters in the civil service by executive order will be practically void of effect if the appointing officer has the right to select among the three names submitted to him. The postoffice is regarded by both parties as a fertile field for partisan advantage. The patronage distributer of the Administration is usually selected as Postmaster General. Under these circumstances, what chance has a Republican eligible against his Democratic rival or vice versa, when the political tide turns the other way?

Herein consists the loophole of favoritism for and discrimination against eligibles on account of politics, religion, sex or race. The Attorney General has upheld the vesting of such discretion in the appointing officer, else there would be no latitude of choice. But the Constitution places the appointment of the Federal personnel from the lowest to the highest in the hands of the President.

Congress with the approval of the President may make regulations governing the method of selection. The President, therefore, has full power and authority to effect this change, by executive order, and Congress has the undisputed right to bring it about through legislation. Unless this is done either by executive order or Congressional action, the integrity of the civil service system can never be perfected or perpetuated according to the intention of its promoters a half-century ago.

A letter from Mr. Charles Burlingham, vice president of the National Civil Service Reform League, states: "our case is unanswerable and when opportunity favors, I shall do all I can to help bring about a fair and square system. There is nothing more hypocritical than the lip service of politicians to the merit system, but this discrimination on account of color is a matter of administration and could be corrected by a few words from those high in authority." KELLY MILLER.

Only Sleeping?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Senators who voted against the President's court plan are anxious to get back home and try and make their constituents believe the court plan is a dead issue, when it is only sleeping until next election.

They know when times are good, with farm prices high, with plenty of money floating around, many Americans think of nothing but a good time, baseball, beer and a new car, but times will change; there will be a bumper crop and farm prices will drop. Right now the Government is buying eggs and butter to hold prices.

Every one knows that Government spending is being curtailed. Most all the schools, all the courthouses, all the postoffices, all the bridges and other projects are about finished and millions will be idle. And when the old hungry wolf hangs around the door, will many of the rank and file do any thinking?

When the Senators tell the plain citizens about the 400 lawyers they sent to the Senate and House to make laws for them, which were declared unconstitutional, then will some new faces be seen in the Senate to aid the President in obtaining justice for the American people from the Supreme Court.

Nazi Camps.

The recent activities of the American outposts of the Nazi regime are a reminder of that occasion a few months ago when Adolf Hitler's official newspapers gave warning that the Nazi government might take an unpleasant interest in the affairs of the race which wears its hat indoors, puts its feet upon the tables and spits chewing gum at the walls.

The American Nazis, naturalized and unnaturalized, have been conducting summer camps in the vicinity of New York in an attempt to fulfill the warning, but up to now the effect has been more ludicrous than unpleasant. The veterans' organizations which have taken alarm need not bother to grab their old muskets from the walls, for the race which wears its hat indoors, puts its feet upon the tables and spits chewing gum at the walls will be more amused and enlightened than disturbed.

The Old World spectacle of men in masquerade uniforms doing the goose-step and hailing the Reich as the greatest country in the world is not only light summer entertainment but a tip-off on the character of those imported Nazis who take the American oath of allegiance but rate the United States second, or worse, in their loyalty.

* * * *

At last week's main demonstration one of the principal speakers said Italy and Germany were the two greatest countries in the world, and the fact that nobody took exception to this appraisal would appear to place the United States in the showhole at best. To be sure, American immigrants from Germany and Italy who rank this country no better than third can hardly have much loyalty left for the land of their adoption, but there are not many of them, and in case of need they could readily be rounded up from their membership rolls. As a subversive force they hardly amount to a respectable nuisance, but as an example of Nazi manners and morals they can do some good. The effect would be better if they would reproduce in their camps certain other attractions of their homeland, such as pagan rites and raids upon churches, concentrations of political prisoners and an election with a ballot having no place for a dissenting vote. These exhibits along with a model of the Nazi censorship and a few mock executions by the courtly official in the full dress suit with the medieval ax would be sure to make a strong impression on the race which wears its hat indoors, puts its feet upon the tables and spits chewing gum at the walls.

Of course, there will be some members of that race, including war veterans, who will be impatient and somewhat indignant at the rudeness of aliens, naturalized and otherwise, who abuse the hospitality of a free country to flout that freedom and extol the rule of the gun. In the land from which the American Nazis come no body of foreigners would be allowed to hold public demonstrations in favor of democracy, but to suppress the Nazis here would be to adopt the most loathsome trait of their own character. Probably they wouldn't like even that, for although they are trying to convert us, they are very inconsistent in a childish and petulant way, and hard to please.

* * * *

It would be interesting to know, however, just how intimately these camps are connected with the Nazi Embassy in Washington, for they do follow the threat in Der Fuehrer's official newspapers, and, of course, the embassy would have an interest in the reprisal promised in so many words a few months back. Probably our State Department does know, because Mr. George Messersmith, once stationed in Berlin and more recently Ambassador in Vienna, is now serving in Washington, and Mr. Messersmith is one of our best authorities on Nazi methods. He was very firm in all his dealings with them when he was in Berlin and was known as a member of that school of diplomacy which in dealing with any Nazi considers it a serious error to back up.

The Nazi camps, though, are no danger to the democratic principles or the freedom of Americans. On the contrary, they constitute convincing chambers of horrors which no American can observe without prizing his freedom more.

Myra, The Monkey.

Who can say what strange, jungle instinct led Myra, the monkey, to seek refuge in the large, idle Montgomery Ward plant? The mind of Myra, of course, is a very simple thing, incapable of understanding the complex of processes of courts and the ways devised by men to destroy each other.

Myra never could understand the logic of the silence along the corridors where many thousands of dollars have been invested and where 2,200 persons once earned their food and rent. Apparently she has not yet visited the courtroom where lawyers debate the technicalities of labor organizations and management.

Perhaps the men who are wise in their generation will prove the superiority of their ways. Perhaps they can emerge from the jungle of words and legal interpretations to the calm order of civilization. Meanwhile a very large group of the human species is near hunger and a large investment is withdrawn from service to its territory. And Myra, in her simple way, wanders around, perhaps out of curiosity as to why this great source of work and income is left desolate.

Old Age Begins At 20.

The normal span of life should be 150 years, but man begins the old-age breakup at 20, according to Prof. Lazarev, chief of the Soviet Union's biological institute at Leningrad. The secret of overcoming the general dissolution process in the human constitution has yet to be discovered, he says. Man is in his prime at 20, the professor believes, after which the "breakup" slowly but inexorably sets in.

BOOKS

A Mid-Week Review of Current Publications

Before Victoria

By Vylla Poe Wilson

STORMS and cross currents, plots and counterplots of England in the time of the Georges form the background for the story of a career of a young man and his friends of the pre-Victorian era. Vaughan Wilkins, a newcomer in the fiction world, has set a high standard for the historical fiction writer of today. Woven in with his romance are the men and women and events which made the history of that day.

Just as Margaret Mitchell injected the sufferings and the joys, emotions and reactions, into her best seller of the Civil War South, so has this author told of the plain people of England, the injustices and the emotions they experienced and their reactions, which prepared the way for the Victorian age.

With the royal scandal and shame which devastated Merrie England in the period of this book, Mr. Vaughan has managed to protray that undercurrent which has endured through the centuries and made England great—the sterling virtues of the British people.

• • • •

THE well-developed plot revolves about the desire for revenge of Mme. de Boucher, who with her husband, had fled to England with their fortune from the shadow of the guillotine in France. Safe from the revolutionary terrors of France, they entered into another danger when they attempted to collect the money they had loaned to their royal highnesses, George Prince of Wales; Frederic, Duke of York, and William, Duke of Clarence.

As an effective manner of repudiating the debt and being rid of it forever, the royal spendthrifts have M. de Boucher deported to France and, of course, to the mercy of the guillotine. And so beautiful Mathilde de Boucher became the master spirit of ruthless intrigue against the House of Hanover.

Christopher, the hero, comes under the thumb of the plotters and experiences many a hair-raising situation. He has sympathy for this woman robbed in her early youth of husband and happiness. But even while a prisoner of Mme. de Boucher, he pleads for Victoria. "This girl Victoria. She isn't tainted; she has been brought up away from them (the Georges). She's been brought up to new ideas—and new ideals. She's new. She's 1835—and not 1735. She's a new line—the foundress of a new dynasty. She can mean something as important as Magna Charta—as the Flood. If there were no hope from her, I should say—and do—nothing."

• • • •

THE Duke and Duchess of Kent and their fat baby, Alexandra Victoria, looked upon askance by the Georges and their court, as a probable future queen not of their cult, appear naturally in the sequence of story.

The tragic Queen Caroline plays an important part in the life of the hero, Christopher Harnish, the unacknowledged son of the pale, lovely royal Princess Amelia. Princess Amelia was a personage about whom a romance could have been written and of which all of the royal personages spoke with regret when she died so young.

The character of Queen Caroline, as it is drawn by the author of this book, reveals real research into her history and a knowledge of the personality of whom he has written. Caroline's tendency to reach out for affection, her kindnesses to those about her, even the children of her husband's mistresses, are told with a masterly consideration of the values of weak and strong elements in a human character.

In these pages are to be found revelations of the characters of the traitorous Duke of Cumberland; the posturing-plotting George IV and the doddering William IV. The life-like characters of a purely fictional substance dominate the action of the book. The young and idealistic Christopher; Deb, the waif who becomes a famous singer; the aristocratic and energetic Old Lord Setoun, who was in love with Christopher's mother; three American ladies, Misses Case, of Casebille, Ala., and their great niece, Arabella, all give individuality and actuality to the entire composition.

• • • •

THERE is something of a Dickens turn to the story when the youthful Christopher finds himself under the control of a group wishing to train him for murder as Fagan trained young Oliver Twist for thievery. Something of the tragedy of the child slavies of the time of the Georges is told in the description of young Christopher's plight as one of six children huddled together in a wagon on their way to serve a cruel and stingy tyrant to whom they were bound out according to the system of child slavery of that day.

There is not a dull passage in the book. The author does not hesitate to enrich his text with character study and description. It sustains a fast-running narrative fraught with suspense. There are scenes of stark horror, exciting gun play and dangerous adventure. The author delves into the tenderness of a woman's heart and indulges in rollicking humor as well.

For those who like to authenticate the history of such books there is a table showing the relationship of the various royal personages mentioned in the book and the frontispiece is a letter from the Duke of Kent to a friend saying . . . "My little girl (Victoria) is, I am delighted to say, strong and healthy; too healthy I fear, in the opinion of some members of my family, by whom she is regarded as an intruder."

The Bard and American Optimism

Our Revival of Interest in Shakespeare Analyzed.

By Frederick L. Gwynn.

One would have to be both quixotic and glib to translate the current Shakespeare revival into terms of national or international consciousness. The fact that in the past year or so there has been a solid number of Shakespearean plays refurbished and put upon the stage, screen, and radio in America is, of course, no indication that another age of Elizabeth is upon us, or that poetry and drama are being remarried in a glorious, satin-and-silk wedding. But it would not be too much to believe (or at least, to hope) that the renewal of interest in Shakespeare has a subtle connotation of a renascent richness in our modern life. Generally speaking, the air which we have breathed since the war has been all too full of the sound and the fury of poets and dramatists beating thin hammers on the bell of life instead of tolling it.

And in this period just past, Shakespeare revivals have often had something of comic relief about them, with their Hamlets in dinner-jackets, not to mention the motion-picture "Taming of the Shrew" which had the egregious caption, "by William Shakespeare, with additional dialogue by Sam Taylor." But there is more to the current let's-do-Shakespeare movement than the mere penchant of matinee idols and idolaters for costume or novelty.

In the first place, the arts in general are coming out of a slump, the post-war slump of febrility and virtuosity. Surrealism, apart from its original serious purpose, has flared up in a popularization recently, but it has gone past, taking with it some of the seeds of faddishness. The arts are acquiring, or regaining, a sense of history, an intangible feeling for the ages. Experiments will continue, of course, as requisite to any species of progress, but in almost every creditable artistic experiment today, the historical sense is manifesting itself.

This is even apart from the renewed impetus given to the historical novel by Kenneth Roberts, Walter Edmonds, Clifford Dowday, Neil Swanson and a host of others. Poetry and music and fiction, while not bound to classical forms, nevertheless display a new allusiveness, not of surface technics perhaps, but of inner structure. While James T. Farrell could never be tagged as being a son of Fielding, or Paul Hindemith set in the Hayden-Mozart-Beethoven succession, nevertheless the works of these creative artists represent an awareness of the past, an awareness which the facile and febrile 'twenties did not, in general, possess. And it is significant that the two most popular books in years "Anthony Adverse" and "Gone With the Wind"—while not great fiction, are in the very tradition of great fiction.

Secondly, the Shakespeare revival is symbolic of another deep-set tendency. Our civilization has reached such a mechanical phase that an element of reaction is setting in. People who feel that the discoveries in the physical laws of transportation and communication are being over-emphasized, are asking the question, What about Man, for whom these inventions are supposedly designed? Alive to the wonders around us, have we not forgotten the wonders within us, in our bodies and minds? Dr. Alexis Carrel's "Man the Unknown" has been a best-seller for a good many months. The Shakespeare revival may have deep roots in this theme. Nothing could be more natural than for Man, in the unconscious return of interest in himself, to find a personal harmony in Shakespeare, the writer who was not only a consummate dramatist, but well-versed in the emotions which we conceive of as being universal.

Thirdly, there is a new approach to Shakespeare based on the exigencies of our changing civilization. We are living in a sit-down world, one that moves slowly and inexorably toward some kind of socialistic order. In the progress toward such a regime, whether we approve of it or not, there will always be an element of humanity which will turn toward those masterpieces of literary, musical, plastic and graphic art which are predominately individualistic in nature; to those works which are comparatively free from political and social concepts. Shakespeare's plays belong in this category, despite the recent claims of the Russian Marxists, notably A. A. Smirnov, who seems to have a picture of the Sweet Swan of Avon dressed all in red, sickle in one hand and hammer in the other, reading the manifesto to his uncomprehending fellows. This conception, of course, just does not tally with Shakespeare's obvious disdain of the crowd, even apart from his temporal approval of the divine right of kings. Of course, he does evidence a knowledge of the Renaissance idea of an ordered society, but his individuals are the brightest facets of his diamond.

Shakespeare, I am afraid, is far from being on the side of the Marxists simply because he has nothing to do with sides; and the people who turn to him will, in one sense, be nonpartisan. I do not mean to imply that these people will turn in a process of escape from life and socialism; rather are they seeking a vehement affirmation of life, a glorious sanctification of those unspecified universal themes and those "eternal verities" which are without utilitarian significance.

Lastly, the Shakespeare revival signifies a nascent recapturing of the richness of life, the particular opulence which is cognate with poetry of grandeur. We are growing rather tired of hearing actors clip off important ideas in sophisticated, elliptical expressions, and actors are growing tired of doing it. We are digging again beneath the superficial accretion of petty symbolism which characterized the post-war period in the drama, and rediscovering the poetic tissues lying closer to the heart of man.

The motion pictures will do much in this renascence. Not only can they supply, potentially, a more fluid and large-scale medium for rich drama, but they have the reach to American audiences which the stage does not possess. When Juliet Shearer begs fate to cut up her Romeo into little stars when he dies, schoolgirls in Gopher Prairie and Banjo Crossing who have never heard of Shakespeare's Dark Lady can thrill in discovery of a new experience.

Whether this whole theory is right or wrong, the next five years will show. Extensive plans for more Shakespeare next season have been under way for months, plays like Richard III and Antony and Cleopatra and Henry IV, which are rather unfamiliar to modern audiences. But that is almost beside our main point. The important thing to look for now is the degree to which our dramatic, literary, and musical arts in America progress with a renewed sense of history, with a feeling for past manifestations of universal values implicit in the progress. The Shakespeare revival is only a symptom of this artistic development or rebirth, not a cause, but it is my firm belief that this symptom is an extremely important one. At the very least, it is a cause for optimism of the highest order.

"NOT TONIGHT," by Parkhurst Whitney. (Farrar & Rinehart, $2.)

A current news story tells that the trashy novels of the past have now earned an honored place in the so-called "ephemeral literature" of American life. Unborn students of America may, therefore, find in "Not Tonight" illuminating data concerning the road-house era.

"Not Tonight" is the story of earthy, stout-hearted Julie, who "hates stews," though continually surrounded by them. "The Mansion," a Victorian architectural monstrosity, is converted by her into a road-house. Here are gathered reformed drunkards and rum-runners as servants, back-sliding inebriates and frustrated old maids as permanent guests, and a variety of transients boasting a liberal sprinkling of vices. Judge Grady, the financial backer of the Mansion," a man of not so dubious character, Gloria, daughter of the buxom Julie, a "blunt-eyed child" to whom the seamy side of life is no novelty.

Flitting from one unfortunate pseudo-comic episode to another, each of which threatens the success of the road-house, "Not Tonight" staggers on to a conclusion which is not one, but rather a realization that an infinite series is never admissable.

"HOME IS WHERE YOU HANG YOUR CHILDHOOD," by Leane Sugsmith. (Random House, $1.50.)

This is an excellent summer book. It is sufficiently interesting to hold your attention in a train and yet not sufficiently entrancing to keep you from going swimming. The majority of the stories in the collection are well constructed, well written and worthy.

The story entitled "New York Visit" is particularly successful and is more or less representative of Miss Zugsmith's style. She manages to convince the reader that she has penetrated the mind of at least one of those inexplicable young women one sees in movie houses and subsways who look like a cross between a high-school girl and a streetwalker. The story deals with the thoughts and emotions of a 16-year-old girl who goes to New York with her father to visit her mother. The parents are divorced; they are poor, ordinary folk and the 12 pages of this little story contain a whole saga of dreariness.

The rest of the stories make fairly interesting reading because Miss Zugsmith knows how to write. They seem to have very little point, however. On the whole, the characters are extremely disagreeable people. There is no doubt that, to Miss Zugsmith, characterization is more important than plot.

Happy Land

"DENMARK, KINGDOM OF REASON," by Agnes Rothery. (Viking Press, $3.)

While this is by no means an exhaustive study of Denmark and its people, it is surprisingly comprehensive. It is so gracefully written that the reader becomes as interested in the factual matter as the author, and shares her enthusiasm and admiration of the achievements of the Kingdom of Reason. Much attention is given to the advanced social conditions of the country and the means by which they were accomplished.

Blessed with arable land and governed by a ruler whose primary concern is his peoples' welfare, the industrious Danes have many reasons for contentment. A mature and homogeneous people, they have come through trials and tribulations to find a life well suited to their requirements. The Danish constitution forbids any Dane to starve.

But this is far more than a study of social conditions. It is a description of a beautiful country, with well tilled fields, blue ponds, white, thatched cottages, great beech forests, picturesque castles and quaint villages. Unending labor has made the fields productive. Whitewash keeps the houses and barns shining and sanitary. It speaks well for the tidy Danes, that a hundred thousand of them may picnic in the beech forests, yet none will injure a tree, frighteen a deer or leave trash behind him.

Famous names are associated with Denmark and valuable contributions to art and letters have been made and are still being made by Danish intellectuals. Bothwell, husband of Mary Queen of Scots, lies in the crypt of the church at Faarevejle and may be seen by tourists for a small fee. On the battlements of Kronberg Castle, 25 miles from Copenhagen, "The majesty of buried Denmark did sometimes march," according to William Shakespeare, and perhaps a youthful Hamlet jested with Yorick in the Knights Hall of that castle. (The Danes do not believe in Hamlet.) At Odensee was born the wistful ugly duckling, that was Hans Christian Andersen, author of the imperishable fairy tales.

Delightful descriptions of the many islands which are a part of the Kingdom of Reason are included in the latter part of the book. It is well illustrated by photographs, made by Harry Rogers Pratt. There is a chronology of Danish history, in the appendix as well as a statement of salient facts and a bibliography. The end papers give a clear map of Denmark and her possessions. This is a treat for the armchair traveler and a useful guide for the voyager who intends to include this smiling land in his summer itinerary.

What a King!

"KING JOHN OF JINGALO," by Laurence Housman. (Scribner's, $2.50.)

In the opinion of many, the book publishing business is becoming more and more like the magazine publishing business. Books are published more and more for their element of timeliness. "King John of Jingalo" is a case in point. his delightful satire on monarchy was originally written by Laurence Houseman in 1912 long before the playwright achieved the present stature brought to him by "Victoria Regina."

It has been revived by the publishers because it has taken on a new timeliness. There are very few lines in it in which one is not tempted to draw parallels with what has been described as "the greatest romance of modern times," that of Wally and the Duke of Windsor.

Jingalo, is, of course, England. The story of the book centers about one year in the placid reign of John in which that monarch receives a bump on the head which leads him to attempt to restore many of the disused prerogatives of royalty. It is a good story from the point of view of sheer narrative.

Mr. Houseman leads us behind the scenes of royalty, often with penetration and understanding. His satire is mordant, but never venomous. The character of John is treated with humor and sympathy. We are led firmly through all the eventful scenes of his Jubilee reign.

With the exception of the queen, who is a paragon of royal conformity, the year of this book sees all the members of the royal family at a great crisis in their lives. The king almost gets the whip hand of the prime minister whose great goal is to protect the sanctity of trade. Max, the crown prince, almost wins the lady of his heart, and the crown princess almost falls in love with the virile Schnapps-Wessel. Almost! That is the keynote. At every turn these earnest royal workers are foiled by the political machinations of the ministry and the obligations of kingship.

In the course of the book we are given a picture of almost every strata of the governing classes of Jingalo, their interests, their cherished ceremonials—to their great detriment. The satire is one of ideas smoothly insinuated upon the reader, ideas which at the present have become barbed with new meaning. They are trussed on a story of solid merit that is suggestive at once of Gulliver and the Graustark tradition. The style, while prolix at times, is readable, and the sense of irony is adequately maintained. While the book bears the stamp of its author's early period, it carries with it the conviction of distinguished letters that Mr. Houseman's name implies. Beyond that we cry loudy that this book will make a dull summer evening pass as naught.

Off the Record

By Ed Reed

"You can smell my breath if you insist, but I'm just making a report for our nature club."

In Old Virginny

By Pendleton Hogan

IN THIS complex day when so many books are written to present problems, to further causes or for the express purpose of making money, it is something of a relief to come across a book that obviously was written to present no problem, to advance no cause and not even to make money. Such a book is John H. Gwathmey's "Twelve Virginia Counties."

In his preface Mr. Gwathmey states, "This book is the story of 12 Virginia counties, an effort to preserve their half-forgotten lore and to furnish a record of the people who have lived in them." The counties chosen bear the names of Gloucester, New Kent, King William, Hanover, King and Queen, Essex, Caroline, Goochland, Louisa, Orange, Albemarle and Augusta.

These counties were the very cradle of English colonization in Virginia. Today, within their borders stand Williamsburg, Richmond, Charlottesville and many other towns and cities whose growth and development, considered in the light of overcoming Indian opposition to their settlement by white men, the evolution of trade and commerce within them, the upbuilding of their tradition and culture, are symbolic of the founding of the United States as a Nation.

• • • •

OF VIRGINIA'S 100 counties these 12 were chosen because the author found them to be the birthplaces of the earliest Western migration from Virginia. In this advance, as grants began to be issued covering lands farther and farther removed from the mouths of the Tidewater rivers, Augusta County became the spearhead. Maps of Augusta, drawn in these early days, showed that the regions which are now West Virginia, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and the western part of Pennsylvania were a part of this county. Its borders extended to the Great Lakes.

• • • •

THE historical significance of these counties, measured by the accomplishments of the people who have lived in them, is great. Viewed as a whole, the counties are truly rich in lore. In one of them Pocahontas saved Capt. John Smith's life. In another young Col. Washington met, wooed and won the "charming Martha Custis." In still another, Thomas Jefferson, then an old man, sat on the lawn at Monticello and through a telescope watching the building of the University of Virginia. Such sidelights, heightened by quotations from old recordings, give a personalized and necessary interest to the book.

However, "Twelve Virginia Counties" is neither a straight history nor a travel guide. The book has many excellent qualities, contains almost limitless bits of information, but its chief fault lies in the fact that its material is of so widely divergent a nature that it does not lend itself to easy and cohesive assemblage. One cannot blame the author for this. And yet one wishes that the author might have found some thread of narrative, or some overall influence as perhaps the thread of time itself, upon which to place and bind his pieces of information into the continuity they lack as presented.

As the book stands, it undeniably contains a great deal of factual information, but this subject matter is presented in prosaic writing which in a few minor instances even repeats itself. Had the story of each county been written more in narrative form and less in the manner of a simple recording of facts, this book might have claimed the distinction its material and the author's research deserve.

• • • •

THE subject matter of the book may be summarized briefly by saying that major portions of it are comprised of lists of the counties' most illustrious sons and daughters, the dates of their services and contributions to Virginia and America, and briefly sketched descriptions of their homes. In presenting all this, the book preserves the flavor of a bygone day, and yet one has the feeling only of looking back and not of being transported into that day. In fact, one almost feels the dust on his own fingers as Mr. Gwathmey carefully turns the yellowed pages of the "court house" records in 12 Virginia "county seats."

"Twelve Virginia Counties" fulfills its author's purpose. It is a record of the principal facts related to a certain section of Virginia. Accordingly, the book takes its place as another step in the long, difficult and creditable task of recording the history, both little known and well known, of the South.

AND SO—VICTORIA
By
VAUGHAN WILKINS

For here is a story abounding in excitement and action from start to finish, superbly combining romance, adventure and history.

Its scene ranges over the world. It covers the two decades before Victoria's accession to the throne of England, a time of plots and counter-plots, of royal scandal and shame unequalled in any other period.

Built around two of the most appealing characters of present day literature, it sweeps the reader with mounting excitement through over 600 pages of colorful story.

Favor for Rider May Help Pass D. C.'s Tax Bill

House Sanctions Tydings' Strategy by Dropping Separate Measure.

Might Raise 10 Millions.

As it passed the Senate the tax bill would raise more than $9,000,000 and possibly close to $10,000,000.

The Board of Trade submitted a table as a suggestion of how sufficient revenue might be raised to meet the current year's deficit. It does not include the income tax.

The table follows:

Business privileges (3-10th of 1 per cent)	$3,000,000
Auto weight	1,500,000
Insurance	200,000
Estate-inheritance	800,000
20-cent raise in realty rate	2,500,000
Strengthened personal property tax	500,000
Total	$8,500,000

The line follows the House bill almost entirely except that the business privilege tax is reduced from three-fifths to three-tenths of 1 per cent.

The Board of Trade previously had opposed the business privilege tax, but it apparently has reached the conclusion that the gross receipts levy, in a modified form, would be preferred to an income tax.

Both the $1 land tax and the income tax, carried in the Senate measure, are ignored in the new report.

The Board of Trade also warned the District heads against planning on a larger budget next year if the new taxes should raise more revenue than now estimated.

"If, after due care, more money is raised than is expected under the new revenue measure," the report stated, "the Commissioners should forthwith take steps looking to a reduction in the tax burden next year rather than to bring appropriations up to a level which might be created through greater revenue collections than is expected."

A second chart was submitted with a list of 16 sources from which the business privilege tax could be expected.

Included in the chart was an estimate that gross earnings of Washington physicians amount to $15,000,000 a year.

Dentists, lawyers, and miscellaneous professions, it was estimated, have a gross income of $50,000,000, which would be taxable under the gross receipts levy.

The Commissioners are prepared to appear before the Senate and House conferees, if the latter consent, to argue against the $1 land tax and give their views on any compromises that may be proposed.

Tom McCarthy

The Postilion
Carving A Mountain Memorial.

MOUNT RUSHMORE, S. DAK., July 25.—There's not an artist in the lot . . . save for Gutzon Borglum, who conceived it . . . and yet they're carving out the greatest monument in the world in the Black Hills of South Dakota.

TOM McCARTHY.

As you drive over the Iron Mountain road to the south of Mount Rushmore, your first glimpse of the memorial flashes upon you dramatically, framed in the mouth of the dark tunnel through which you drive. You can see them then, those ex-cowboys and farmhands, construction workers and miners, who are carving out probably the most daring sculpture in history. Dark specks against the gleaming white of the granite, they waver perilously in their leather saddles, proportioned to the giant faces upon which they work as a swarm of houseflies to a decorative bust.

As your car twists and turns through the pines which darken the Black Hills, you find in each glimpse of the National Memorial something new. You find the flowing and living line, which distinguishes the human face and great sculpture, in these gigantic figures carved from the solid granite. Even though the head of Washington, which is completed, would dwarf the Sphinx, it is no mere mechanical imposition on a mountainside.

* * * *

SEEN FROM ONE angle, the giant head rises severe and aloof. Yet again, as you round a curve, you find your new perspective lends understanding and kindly dignity to that granite face with its background of drifting clouds.

It has been a long ten years of careful, plodding endeavor since that day in August when President Calvin Coolidge was carted to the memorial site in the back of a horse-drawn wagon, so that he might dedicate the mountain as a National Memorial. In that time, more than 4,000 tons of granite have been cut and blasted from the mountainside.

Good roads have been built through what was then an almost unbroken wilderness and, today, they carry hundreds of thousands of tourists yearly to the giant undertaking now nearing completion. Framed by sky and the dark pine slopes of neighboring mountains, the face of Washington stands completed. In virtually its final form, the likeness of Jefferson looks out over the hills, while, far to the right, the brow and head of Lincoln can be seen emerging from the rock. To complete the work, the memorial awaits the addition of the head of Theodore Roosevelt.

The people in that section of the Black Hills are waiting expectantly for the completion of that head of Abraham Lincoln. They have seen the monument grow from an idea into a reality and they take a personal interest in it. "Lincoln will be the best of the lot," they'll tell you, knowingly. They point out that Mr. Borglum's son, who assists his father in directing the work, is named Lincoln.

* * * *

GUTZON BORGLUM was away on the day of my visit, but the young lady in charge of the studio which faces the mountain volunteered to answer my questions about the project. She informed me that Mr. Borglum was a "very nice man," that he didn't mind visitors peeping over his shoulder when he worked on the model of the memorial which fills one end of the studio; that, when he was pleased with a day's work, he would congratulate the workmen; that, when something went wrong, he was likely to get a bit steamed up about it; and that he figured on completing the work in three more seasons, if nothing unforeseen intervened.

Some of the young lady's information ran to the statistical, and I learned that the great dome of the Capitol Building would just fit over Washington's head. The young lady agreed with me that the Father of our Country would look rather silly wearing the dome of the Capitol; but, unperturbed by my interruption, she produced the equally startling fact that the nose of Washington in the National Memorial is 4 feet longer than the entire head of the Sphinx.

From Frank Maxwell, one of the workers on the project, I learned that the young lady's information about the length of Washington's nose was absolutely reliable. It seems that Jim Paine, the young lady's husband, is a driller on the memorial, and his peculiar facility in working on the noses of the great faces has kept him . . . much to his disgust . . . constantly assigned to that one feature of the construction. I agreed with Maxwell; that five or six years spent in doing nothing but carving noses might be a little tedious.

* * * *

I ASKED MAXWELL if one had to know something about art to get a job on the memorial.

"Heck, no," he laughed. "As close as I can figure, you ought to be a farmhand or a miner, or somethng like that, to get a job working here. That's what most of us are."

"Do you mean, that I might get a job working on it?" I asked him.

"Well, there are 78 applications in ahead of you, but only two of those are from drillers. If you know how to handle a pneumatic drill, you'd stand a fair chance of getting on. Some of the boys leave every once and a while."

I asked him what he meant by "some of the boys leave."

"I guess some of them can't take it," he said. "You know, those faces are 60 feet, from chin to crown, and they're a couple of hundred feet in the air. Sometimes the boys get a little tired of walking backward down those faces, easing themselves along on their leather saddles, and trying to keep hold of a 65-pound drill."

"Scared?"

"Nervous, anyway. I used to be that way when I started in, three years ago. It sort of gets you, if you look over your shoulder and figure out how far you can fall. Still, nobody has been even seriously hurt since the work began, so maybe there's nothing to get nervous about."

* * * *

MAXWELL, a well set-up young man of slightly less than medium height, told me that like many another worker on the mountain, he learned his job, on the job. He came there as common laborer, helped to move machinery and acted as general handyman. After a while, he was promoted to one of those leather saddles, given a drill and sent down the face of the mountain.

They don't actually carve the faces . . . they blast them! The drillers prepare the dynamite holes and the rock is blasted away to within a few inches of the desired surface. The last few inches are chipped away and smoothed with automatic four-point hammers. The work on the mountain is accomplished by exact measurement, corresponding to the scale model in the studio.

Maxwell told me that the workers take their jobs casually as they would the task of building a chicken coop. They work about 48 hours a week, for five months of the year, and draw from 65 cents to $1.25 an hour. When the season of work is over, they go back to farming, mining or carpentry. He said that some, even making $1 an hour, just go home and go on relief.

Since the season is short they'll work in any sort of weather barring a lightning storm. Maxwell said that it isn't a very good idea to go swinging off the face of a mountain during a lightning storm carrying a 65-pound steel drill.

Farm Leaders Are Resigned to Bill's Failure

Activity Centers on Price Stabilization Move Next Year.

By Russell Smith

Advocates of farm stabilization legalization yesterday surrendered hope of passage in this session of Congress and centered their activity in a quest for early action in the next session.

Leaders of most national farm organizations met the House Agriculture Committee yesterday in a final effort to obtain action.

Afterward, it was disclosed the two major organizations themselves disagree on the necessity for quick legislation, and Chairman Jones, of the committee, said a bill might be reported if Congress stays in session a month. In view of the state of Congressional sentiment, this amounted to a declaration the bill will not be reported.

Leaders Are Resigned.

Instead, it was strongly indicated, the House committee will join with the corresponding Senate committee in conduct of regional hearings over the country during the summer recess.

Most farm leaders last night were resigned to failure of their efforts at this session. They said privately they will concentrate now on obtaining a general farm bill soon after oCngress returns in January.

"If we can get a bill through in fairly satisfactory form before March no harm will have been done," said a representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation, principal proponent of enactment at this session.

"If it is delayed later than that, however, serious trouble may follow, since in the South cotton farmers will be planting in most places during that month. A brake of some sort will be very desirable."

Grange Fears No Delay.

The farm bureau during the day issued a statement insisting upon action and criticizing adversely the pending Jones bill, but Edward A. O'Neal, president, later said prospects were not good for an act this year.

The bureau's disapproval of the Jones bill is based on its view that, while adequate surpluses to protect consumers might be maintained or reasonable prices might be assured farmers, "it is not believed both objectives can be achieved at the same time."

The bureau bill is that introduced by Representative Flannagan (Democrat), of Virginia. Both bills contain a granary plan, but the federation feels Jones' proposals do not go far enough.

The farm bureau's position was seriously impaired yesterday when it was disclosed the National Grange, oldest and second largest organized farm group, believes no grave damage would be done if action was deferred until the next session of Congress.

convinced it was more than 4 miles from the Cheltenham station.

Samuel J. Solomon, Washington Airport manager, who testified in support of the May bill, which would permit the closing of Military road, the filling in of the lagoon at the edge of the field, and the lease to the terminal company of part of the Agricultural Experimental Station, said the proposed measure would permit construction of another runway more than a mile long at the present terminal.

Representative Jack Nichols, of Oklahoma, said the May bill would "give Washington an eminently satisfactory airport at no cost to the Federal Government, Arlington County, or the city of Washington." He declared it was "a unique situation" when private capital met obstruction in providing facilities which in every other city of comparable size throughout the United States have been constructed at the expense of the local taxpayers.

In support of his contention the airport should be owned by the Government, Representative Thomason asked Representative Nichols if the airport commission had made any estimates as to the value of Washington Airport.

Bob Burns Says:

Two men was tryin' to get me in a big business proposition out here and they both admitted that they were thoroughly honest, but I wanted to make sure so I sent for my Uncle Cy Cordell and I says, "Uncle Cy, you're the best angler in Crawford County and I want you to take these two men out fishin' and study their character."

Well sir, when Uncle Cy came home he says, "Bob, don't have nothin' to do with them two men!" He says, "You can't trust 'em—they're dishonest to the core!" He said, "They knew I was a good angler so they made a proposition that the first one that caught a fish had'ta treat the bunch." He said, "Do you know that all afternoon they sat there with the cork bobbin' and they got bite after bite but they was too dishonest to pull their lines up."

I says, "Well, I suppose you lost a bet!" and he says, "No, but I would have if I'd had any bait on my hook!"

The Federal Diary

Reg. U. S. Patent Office.

By Scott Hart.

Mostly Social.

The recently organized Interior Department Recreation Association intends to co-ordinate the many bureau activities throughout the department under one head for the purpose of bringing all Interior employes together in a spirit of fraternal endeavor.

For many years there have been in existence several associations in the various bureaus whose aims have been along similar lines. These endeavors, however, were necessarily confined to small groups within individual bureaus. For example, the Bureau of Mines has a golf association, which has been functioning for 15 years. Within this bureau, R. Herbert Hughes and H. S. Kennedy have been moving spirits in promoting social activity. Aside from the Bureau of Mines, it may be noted that the department also has had—for some time—a general golf association with 160 members.

Again, the Office of Indian Affairs has had its own athletic association. S. W. Crosthwait has been a stanch promoter of athletics in this bureau. John Merchant and Russell Slight are others who have kept the ball rolling. There have been several bowling leagues within the department, operating successfully. The promotion of this sport has been largely with H. D. Billings and J. R. Wannan.

"These instances indicate the need and demand for such a governing body as the I. D. R. A. will furnish to co-ordinate all athletic endeavor under well-regulated organization," the recreation association leaders say.

With the White House staff represented in the Government employe "Quest for Talent" contest, now in progress at the Wardman Park Hotel, the third audition will be held tomorrow night with approximately 20 entries. The entries will come from Navy, State, PWA, Tariff Commission and General Accounting Office. Frank Sanderson will be one of the White House representatives. Enid Mitchell, representing REA, was winner of the second audition. Judges of the third audition will be Bernie Harrison, of the Herald, Don Craig, of the Daily News, and Scott Hart, of The Post.

The A. F. G. E. goes sailing down the river on what is predicted to be a big moonlight excursion the night of Tuesday, August 3. The boat, S. S. Potomac, will leave the Seventh and Water street dock at 8:45 o'clock. The call for the outing comes from Ira Y. Bain, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, District Department.

The July 29 meeting of the Washington group, United Civil Service Employees, has been called off. E. Claude Babcock, the national president, reports that the national office is in the midst of a move from the National Press Building to the McGill Building, 908 G street northwest. The McGill Building was recently vacated by the Bureau of Mines.

In the new location, Babcock says the organization will be more conveniently situated—near the Civil Service Commission offices, where much of the work of the group is transacted. The offices wil be on the ground floor, providing space for meetings.

Among recent retirements from the Department of Comerce were two faithful employes, one with 35 years' service to his credit. They are Edgar Buckingham, Bureau of Standards, 35 years' service, and Percy H. Walker, of the same bureau, who served for 33 years.

Whooo!

Public Health Service Lodge, No. 41, makes known resolution endorsing and supporting President Stengle, of the A. F. G. E. and the executive council in "ridding the organization of destructive and injurious elements which have brought discredit on the name of the American Federation of Government Employes and obstructed the attainment of its objectives for the benefit of Government personnel." That's a nice bouquet for the seven suspended lodges.

Jacob Baker, provisional president, United Federal Workers of America, will address an open meeting of Farm Credit Administration Local No. 14, in Room 600, F. C. A. Building, at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon. He will present a charter to the local. All FCA employes are invited.

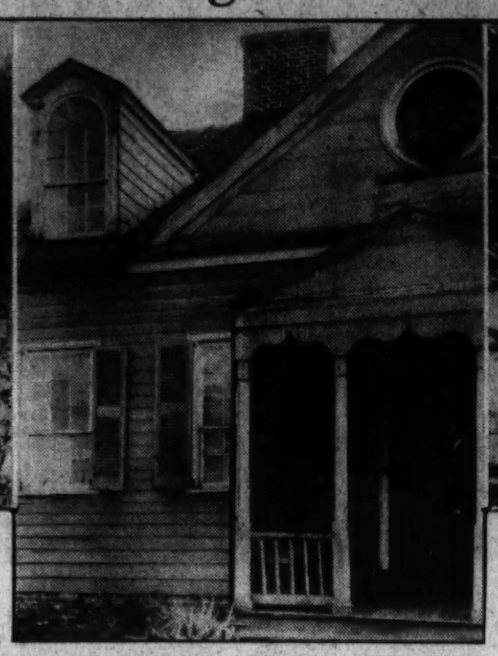
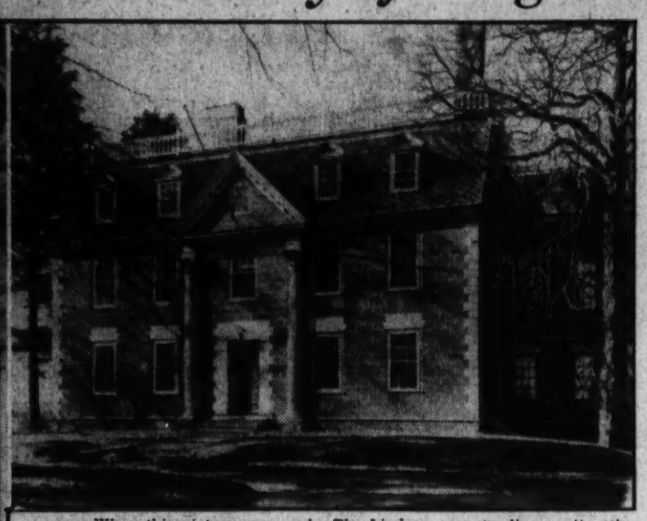
Interior Department Preserves Nation's Architectural Heritage By Filing Photographs, Drawings and Plans in Library of Congress

DuPont Powder Mill at Hagley, Del., is the oldest duPont mill in existence. A fine example of early American architecture, it probably was patterned after powder mills in France.



Ruppert House on Bladensburg road and New York avenue represents the Maryland type of farmhouse. It was formerly known as "Haddock's Hills."



When this picture was made, The Lindens was standing on its original site in Danvers, Mass. It now stands on Kalorama road northwest, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Morris.

By Christine Sadler.

Prosaic individuals who believe Americans have settled down contentedly in the old homeplaces, now that the California gold rush is over and the Government is opening up no more Indian territory, just haven't been following efforts of the Department of the Interior to make the country conscious of its architectural heritage.

Plenty of citizens still have enough confidence in the future to make them willing to turn a true colonial home into a filling station on two weeks' notice.

It breaks the Interior's heart that the history bound up in homebuilding is no more carefully cherished by the descendants of people who made it; but there's not much it can do—except measure, photograph and put the plans in the Library of Congress.

Since 1933, a total of 2,130 buildings has been "preserved on paper" as a result of the department's effort. Owners of 150 of these buildings were so little impressed that they have let them be torn down.

An exhibit of the work the department has done in its Historical American Buildings Survey is now on display in the art gallery of the new Interior Department Building, the first exhibit held there.

The work was discontinued as a Federal project on July 1, although a few States are continuing it as a re-employment project for architectural draftsmen and artists. If their work measures up it will also be preserved at the Library of Congress.

Not all torn-down buildings are lost forever. Some of them are moved to other cities and others are "stored away for future use."

When the Department of the Interior began its architectural work, for instance, The Lindens was one of the show places of Danvers, Mass. Now it is out on Kalorama road, in Washington. Its present owners, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Morris, are representative of the Americans who love old houses and will go to almost any amount of trouble to get one that suits them.

The Lindens is regarded as one of the finest remaining examples of pure Colonial architecture. It was built in 1754, has extensive interior panelling and twisted balusters of unusual beauty. Its extensive garden was laid out in 1840 and is the only feature not brought to Washington. Anyone wanting to develop a garden like it, however, can get the plans from the Library of Congress for a small price.

The library has already made many sales of the drawings, plans and photographs—of which 14,300 were made—and has an increasing number of calls from persons who wish to see the record that has been accumulated.

As an example of a house that has been torn down and "packed away," guides at the exhibit point to pictures and garden plans of The Hermitage, near Savannah, Ga. This old classic revival residence was one of Henry Ford's purchases. He planned to move it to his Georgia plantation and put it up again as a Southern home. Mrs. Ford did not take to the idea and the slave-made bricks are still stored, the guides said.

The survey did not confine its study to homes. Churches, missions, hospitals, schools, industrial buildings, forts and other structures erected before the last quarter of the nineteenth century and considered of architectural or historic importance were included.

The duPont powder mill at Hagley, Del., probably patterned after the powder mills of France, is shown as representing early industrial architecture in this country.

When photographs and measured drawings were not enough to make the record complete, project workers have resorted to water color. The exhibit of color drawings of windows and altars in the missions of New Mexico is an illustration of this, as are also the painted Louisiana scenes.

Although the exhibit for the most part reflects regional architectural trends of earlier America, some of the buildings are surprising to persons who think all columned structures were in the Sonth, that Texas before the Civil War was all "wild West," or that all early New England churches were plainly severe.

Ruppert House, at Bladensburg road and New York avenue, is included in the exhibit as "a Maryland type farmhouse." Several Virginia and Maryland places also are in the collection.

Wage Board Takes Steps To Fix Rates

Employers, Employes, Public to Be Represented by Group.

Women's Minimum Pay to Be Settled at Conferences.

Both employers and employes were called upon yesterday by the Minimum Wage Board to nominate candidates to represent them at a wage-fixing conference.

The move was seen as the first step toward fixing minimum wages for approximately 20,000 women who are employed in Washington retail stores.

The employers and employes were urged to nominate nine candidates each, and from these the board will select three persons to represent each group at the sessions.

In turn, the board will nominate nine men and women to represent the public. Three persons will be re-elected from this group to participate in the conferences.

Women Meet August 4.

Employers were asked by the board to nominate their representatives not later than August 15. On August 4 women employes will meet at the Departmental Auditorium on Constitution avenue to map procedure for the naming of their nominees at a meeting to be held later.

The board urged co-operation of the retail merchants in announcing the meeting of the employes.

To Hold Hearings.

Before recommending to the board the amount of the minimum wage to be paid in the retail mercantile industry here, the nine members selected from the 27 nominees to represent employers and the general public will hold hearings and conduct inquiries.

There are 4,815 retail establishments in the District employing 32,000 persons, of whom 20,000 are women, the Census Bureau has reported.

The name of only 2,000 employers are now in the hand of the Minimum Wage Board, Miss Gwen Geach, executive secretary, said yesterday.

All retail employers who failed to get the notices mailed yesterday were urged to get in touch with the board immediately, so they might be kept informed of its activities.

Water Charges For Last Year Go Up 25 Pct.

District residents wil lbe forced to pay 389,000 more for water they used in the last fiscal year than in the year before.

The reason is that when Congress ordered a 25 per cent decrease in water rates, effective July 1, 1934, the Commissioners decided that all bills sent out after that date should carry the reduced rate.

Congress then removed the 25 per cent water rate decrease provision in the current appropriation bill, so that rates returned to the basis fixed July 1, 1930.

When the reduction was ordered three years ago, the consumers obtained the benefits of the reduction for 11 months to that date. Rescinding of the reduction, and restoration of the old rate, is, therefore, restroactive, it was revealed at the District Building yesterday, as of July 1, 1937.

District Auditor Daniel Donovan has instructed Edward H. Grove, water registrar, that date of the compilation of water bills rather than the period during which the water was consumed should be used as the basis for applying the increase.

Each section of the city is assigned a different "year" for taxing purposes by the water department, Groves asserted.

Consumers in the northwest "country section," embracing the area north of Florida avenue, are now receiving bills for the year extending from April 30, 1936, until April 30, 1937.

Grove explained further that the 25 per cent reduction has been applied to these bills because they should have been in the hands of the consumers by July 1.

The reduction, however, will not apply to water consumed in May and June by these consumers, he pointed out.

The increased rate for water used during the three months ending June 30 of this year will be charged large business establishments, which are billed quarterly, Groves added.

Depositors in Fidelity Propose To Reorganize Firm Themselves

Depositors of the Fidelity Building & Loan Association, now in receivership, moved yesterday to work out their own plan for reorganization, following withdrawal of the First Federal Savings & Loan Association's offer to take over the Fidelity assets.

Their first effort was to enlist the support of Senator William King for the depositors. A delegation of three members of the depositors' group, Mrs. Mark C. Bullis, Dr. Robert Tyler, and Mr. D. A. Irr called on Senator King late yesterday afternoon, and it was understood he planned to start investigating the situation this morning.

Senator King was active shortly after the Fidelity went into receivership in suggesting to the Home Loan Bank Board that it consider the possibility of a reorganization program.

Treasury officials yesterday told the group of depositors they would be open to further negotiation on a plan of reorganization, in a meeting held at the offices of the Fidelity Association.

Meanwhile officers of the First Federal were continuing to stay out of the picture, although it was understood they would be willing to return if the depositors group asks them to, and if their reorganization plan is found to be acceptable to Treasury officials.

Their withdrawal followed an estimate by Fidelity receivers that depositors would be able to realize 85 per cent of their investment through liquidation. Directors of the First Federal had planned to issue their stock, insured by the Home Loan Bank Board, to 85 per cent of the value of Fidelity assets, on their estimate of the value of these assets under conditions of a going concern.

H. P. Somerville, chairman of the Federal Association, said that if 85 per cent could be realized through liquidation, "it would be to the best interests of the depositors for the First Federal to withdraw its offer." Somerville believed an earlier estimate of 70 per cent liquidation value announced several weeks ago by Treasury officials would be more acurate than the recent estimate of 85 per cent.

Cancer Center Plans to Await Appropriation

Although no architectural plans of the National Cancer Institute authorized by Congress have been actually drawn, the Public Health Service knows so clearly what it wants and needs it will not take long "to get the plans on paper," Dr. Lewis R. Thompson, head of the National Institute of Health, said last night.

The bill, calling for establishment of the institute at a cost of $750,000 and an annual expenditure of $700,000 to run it and purchase radium, is now awaiting the President's signature.

The institute will be built in Bethesda, Md., on land given by the late Luke Watson. Actual drawings will not be made, however, until the money is appropriated.

Dr. Carl Voegtlin, who heads cancer work in the Public Health Service, is the "logical man" to head the new institute, Dr. Thompson declared. Dr. Voegtlin now is visiting cancer laboratories in Switzerland, Sweden, Germany and France.

Construction of the institute buildings will require approximately 18 months, but radium can be purchased and put into use as soon as the money is available, Dr. Thompson said. According to present plans, the Government will buy two grams a year for five years and loan it to States and reputable cancer institutions in which there is a scarcity.

Va. Firm Warned To Abandon Sales At District Prices

Richmond, July 27 (AP).—E. C. C. Woods, secretary of the Virginia Milk Commission, said today he had warned High's Ice Cream Stores, operating in the Arlington-Alexandria market, against endangering their State license by distributing Washington "order blanks" for Highland Farms Dairy.

Woods said the commission was informed the stores were distributing postcards or "order blanks," by which customers could place orders with the dairy in Washington and obtain milk at lower prices than those prescribed in the area under the State commission's jurisdiction.

D. C. Dealers Attend Music Industry Parley

Among Washington dealers attending the thirty-sixth annual Convention and Trade Show of the Music Industries in New York are Homer L. Kitt, of the Homer L. Kitt Co., and Hugo Worch. The convention is the largest in the history of the industry.

Every type of instrument from pipe organs to piccolos is on exhibit. Special emphasis is placed on pianos.

Gradual Slash In D.C. Pay Roll Is Aim of Bill

Gradual reduction of the personnel in the District govrnent service to a possible maximum of 1,000 will be provided in a reorganization bill being drafted by Representative Kennedy (Democrat), of Maryland, he disclosed yesterday.

Kennedy, who has been working on the bill for the last month, hopes to have it ready for introduction in a week, although there is little likelihood of action this session.

Reduction in employes will be accomplished, Kennedy said, by eliminating over-lapping agencies and installing modern billing equipment in the tax assessor's office.

He stated, however, that he did not propose to force out any number of District employes but to provide that vacancies should not be filled as they occur.

Details of the bill, which will propose a modified form of home rule, through the creation of an advisory council of local citizens, have not been worked out.

Poison Death Here Declared a Suicide

Mrs. Irma Dean Klatt, 34, of 110 Maryland avenue northeast, killed herself, Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald ruled yesterday.

Mrs. Klatt died in Casualty Hospital Monday a short time after she had staggered to the elevator in the apartment building and said she had taken poison.

Detective Sergt. Jeremiah Flaherty learned that the woman lived with her divorced husband and their 14-year-old daughter, Patricia. Klatt, engineer in the apartment, said he and his wife had obtained a limited divorce several years ago but that she had returned there to live as housekeeper. The husband said she had been in ill health for the past two years.

100th Child Sent To Bald Eagle Hill

The District Tuberculosis Association yesterday sent its 100th child to the association's summer camp at Bald Eagle Hill. The money for the child's upkeep was provided in subscriptions totaling $121.02 received in the association's mail yesterday as the result of feature stories carried by The Post and other Washington papers on the camp and its facilities.

Nearly $3,000 has been subscribed since the first of the stories appeared on July 7. The money has made it possible for 60 children to be sent to the camp. Mrs. Ernest R. Grant, managing director of the association, announced she lacked but $9.33 to send the 101st child to camp.

Mgr. Ready Named Domestic Prelate

Appointment of the Very Rev. Mgr. Michael J. Ready, general secretary of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, as domestic prelate with the title of right reverened monsignor—an honor conferred by Pope Pius XI—was announced here last night.

Mgr. Ready, a priest of the Cleveland diocese, was appointed to his position with the conference in 1936 to succeed the late Mgr. John J. Burke, C. S. P. He had been assistant general secretary from June, 1931. In 1934, Pope Pius named him a papal chamberlain with the title of very reverened monsignor.

Film Director Leads No Soft Life, Says One

Between-Pictures Lull Is Idle Myth, Declares Bathtub King.

By Cecil B. DeMille.

For the United Press.

Hollywood, July 27.—On my desk is a letter from a young man. He wants to be a director.

To the first outburst I received from him, I replied, "why not just get yourself a hair shirt and lie down on a bed of nails?"

"But think," he now suggests, in an eager young hand, "of the leisure between films."

I do. I think of it quite often, with the wistful longing of a man who has a dream yet to realize. "What leisure?" I feel like asking him, and a shade petulantly, at that. Even bookkeepers get down off their stools for two weeks out of the year. I'm riding the camera boom even when I'm in bed.

My youthful correspondent's notion of directors seems to be based on what he has read or seen in the movies. Perhaps if I send him a copy of my schedule between pictures it will dissuade him from the thought that directing motion pictures is a dilettante proposition allowing time for indolence and play. Perhaps I can turn him aside into something less trying, like flagpole sitting or deep-sea diving.

Rigorous Schedule.

Most mornings, when not directing, I am up by 8 o'clock. But I haven't been sleeping until that hour. I've been wrestling with the problems of the day.

One of the pleasantest interludes of the 24 hours is when I have breakfast with Mrs. De Mille in her sitting room. It is large and colonial and the sun comes in on the green rug. We sit in a sunny corner and talk.

For me, this could last all day. But the telephone starts to ring. It is easier to cope with the telephone when you are seated at your desk in an office than when you must keep scurrying across the room from where you are comfortably reposing on your spine. So I finish the grapefruit, dress and go down stairs.

Postmen, their backs bent with toil, have been bringing in the mail since an early hour. It is piled on my desk in heaps. It is formidable because I know it contains heartaches, fury, insults and praise, censure and cries for help. But if I avoid it today, there will be a larger pile tomorrow. So, with the secretaries, I dig in.

Busy Until Noon.

The mail and other matters keep us busy until noon, when I drive to the studio. A lady is waiting there to ask me about glamour for a story she is going to write. I think it's always the same lady, but maybe not. She wants to know what is glamour, who has it and how do you get it. I always tell her the same thing: "Glamour is an old Scotch word meaning spell cast by magic." From there on I fumble, but somehow she puts together a story and I read it some months later in a magazine.

My next act is to go to lunch.

Between bites I discuss the following Monday's radio script with the writers and whoever happens to stop by. Sometimes we wind up with snatches of conversation in the script that don't belong there at all. It's just something the bus boy said in passing and the secretary took it down, thinking it was a pearl dropped from the lips of one of us.

No Prandial Bacchanale.

After luncheon, I have a story on "The Buccaneer," which we shall shortly start with Fredric March in the title role. This lasts from two to four or six hours. When possible, I also discuss casting problems with my associate producer, Bill Pine, who carefully points out how much money I could save by hiring cheaper actors. I refuse to hire cheaper actors, and Mr. Pine goes back to his office, dragging his feet and his sheet of figures and throws himself on the divan, crying softly.

By 8 o'clock, I have exhausted the help, so I go home to a late dinner. The bacchanal element is noticeably lacking from the dinners at our house There is no fountain of wine, no ringing of cymbals, no dancing girls. We sit down at the table and I have a discussion among the family about something that happened during the day.

After dining, we go into the library, I signal the projectionist, and we look at a picture or two, sometimes a test.

And that's the self-denying schedule I have set for myself beween pictures. But now that I look at it on paper, perhaps it's not so bad after all. Maybe it's as pleasant a way of passing the time as any.

Melville Cooper Cast in Hit Play

Melville Cooper, now at work in Mervyn LeRoy's "The Great Garrick," has been cast in the role of a banker in the forthcoming cinematic version of "Tovarich." Cooper created the role in the stage production, still one of the outstanding Broadway hits. Costarred in "Tovarich," now in production under the direction of Anatole Litvak, are Claudette Colbert and Charles Boyer. Other additions to the cast over the week-end were Gregory Gaye, who will portray "Count Brekenski;" Kurt Bois, who goes in as "Alphonso," and Allen Conrad, who will play the role of "Georges DuPont."

Keep Hair Waved, Wives Advised by Myrna Loy

Hollywood July 27 (AP).—From the vantage point of a year's marital happiness, Myrna Loy advised her sisters in wedlock today to keep their chins up and their hair waved.

The green-eyed 32-year-old actress was married—for the first time—to Arthur Hornblow, jr., her director in "Arrowsmith," June 2, 1936.

A wife cannot escape the competition of other women," is Miss Loy's philosophy, "but she shares the same privileges at the beauty parlor."

Back From Location.

Location sequences, filmed along the seacoast have been completed for the Alfred Hitchcock production, "The Girl Was Young," starring youthful Nova Pilbeam, Derrick DeMarney and Percy Marmont before the cameras.

Nelson B. Bell About The Showshops

The Nation's Literati Take a Whirl at Ad-Writing, Inspired by Artistic Worth of New Film Productions

Industry Rubs Its Eyes as Noted Writers Pay Regular Rates to Express Their Enthusiasm; "Going Native" Rehearsals Saturday; Tennis Table Champion Belongs to Theater; Notes of the Theater.

A SUDDEN accretion of distinguished names seems to be overtaking the business of ad writing for the motion pictures.

Because she wrote something in her column that struck Samuel Goldwyn as suitable for exploitation of one of his screen productions, we do not at all wish to appear to place Mrs. Roosevelt, wife of the President, among Hollywood's paid "ad writers," but unsolicited testimonials to the excellence of certain other film plays seem to strengthen the view that the cinema is attracting the attention of the better minds among the country's writers.

BELL.

In corroboration of this impression comes a letter from S. Charles Einfeld, national director of advertising and publicity for the Warner Brothers product, under date of July 26, reading in part as follows:

"A most unusual thing happened to me last week. The Hollywood Reporter came to my desk with an unsolicited and personally paid-for ad on 'Zola' by Jack Moffitt, former motion picture editor of the Kansas City Star. (Mr. Moffitt doesn't work for Warner Brothers and, frankly, I don't know what his present occupation is.) This was followed very quickly by my weekly copy of Variety, with the same sort of indorsement of 'Dead End' and evidently personally paid for by Mr. Ben Hecht.

"Just one effect did both of these have on me—regardless of my personal interest in 'Zola.' The 'movies' certainly are growing up when they can inspire writers of this caliber to burst into print at their own expense to extol the rise of motion pictures.

"I haven't seen 'Dead End,' but I understand it is great. I have seen 'Zola,' but lest I make this letter sound like a plug for one of our pictures, I will simply say that we will give it a world premiere on August 11, in our Hollywood Theater in New York."

'Among other things Ben Hecht, formerly one of the arch enemies of the cinema, had to say concerning "Dead End," the following may be quoted as typical: "I've always had the notion that the theater could hit harder than the screen, bounce higher, say more and dig deeper. After an hour-and-a-half look at Mr. Goldwyn's production of 'Dead End,' I entered Mr. Goldwyn's office with head hung and ready to join the true faith, and murmur that I may have been wrong . . . It is a more unflinching, undecorated and brilliant attack on the emotions than any stage play, including its own Broadway origin, I've seen in years."

In a similar paroxysm of white-hot enthusiasm, Mr. Moffitt, along with much more, delivered himself of this with regard to "Zola:" "As a writer, I am proud of this story of a writer, though I had nothing to do with its production. I am proud to be a part of the Hollywood that produced it. As an American citizen, I am proud of the fact the artists of the republic have at last been permitted to apply their talents to a theme that is republican. As a Gentile, I get supreme satisfaction from the story of this Gentile who fought to give a Jew justice, and thereby behaved like a Christian . . . To Mr. Muni and Mr. Dieterle, I am grateful for the inspiration of their artistry."

Knowing something, in a vague sort of way, of the personal incomes enjoyed by these gifted gentlemen, I hesitate to believe that these encomiums are a part of the chicanery of any bogus publicity scheme, inspired by money lust. It seems more reasonable to believe that they mean every word of what they have said.

It will be recalled in this connection that it was Ben Hecht, in association with Charles MacArthur, who declared that the only reason Noel Coward had consistently refused to appear in pictures was that no film play had been offered him that appealed to his sense of true "theater." So the Messrs. Hecht and MacArthur wrote "The Scoundrel" and Mr. Coward played it before the cameras.

What I mean to say is that these erudite observers know their pictures and that pictures consistently are climbing to the uniform level of their intelligence and powers of discrimination.

Who, I wonder, will be the next celebrity to champion "the cause?"

Rehearsals for the annual production of the "Going Native" revue, to be presented on the stage at Loew's Capitol Theater next month, will begin on Saturday morning of this week in the National Theater. Girls over 18 years of age, one is given to understand, still are needed for the chorus. Director Gene Ford has made a special trip to New York to engage a dance director who will whip them into professional proficiency by the time the curtains part on the show. Announcement soon will be made of the complete list of principals selected for the "Going Native" cast.

It is Manager Edmund Plohn, "Eddie" to youse-all, who calls my attention to the fact that the Ruth Hughes Aarons, table tennis champion, headlining this week's stage bill at the Earle with Viktor Barna, is the daughter of the late Alfred E. Aarons, one of the pillars of an earlier day in the theater.

Alfred E. Aarons, when the living theater was in its heyday, was at one time general manager for Klaw and Erlanger, an independent producer of prominence and erstwhile manager of Koster and Bial's Music Hall in New York—not a glorified janitor, as in some instances may or may not have been the case, but the farsighted showman who brought to this country Cleo de Merode, Albert Chevalier, Lottie Collins (of "Ta-Ra-Ra-Boom-de-Ay" fame) and the leading international variety artists of that day. He likewise served as manager of Hammerstein's Victoria, the "Palace" of its day on Broadway.

The senior Aarons also was the father of Alex Aarons, of the producing firm of Aarons and Freedly, a half-brother of Ruth's. With Miss Aarons, as announcer, appears her brother, Lyle Andrews, an embryonic prestidigitator.

All of which should bring back fragrant memories to those whose minds hark back a few years in the theater. Alfred E. Aarons was one of the fast disappearing "old guard."

When the Newton Theater throws open its doors to the public at the corner of Twelfth and Newton streets northeast, tomorrow night at 7, the major screen attraction will be the sprightly comedy, "I Met Him in Paris," with Claudette Colbert, Melvyn Douglas and Robert Young. Preceding the presentation of the inaugural bill, brief ceremonies will be conducted by John McLean, president of the Brookland Citizens Association. Addresses of welcome will be made by District Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, John J. Hurley, president of the Michigan Park Citizens Association, and John Fowler, secretary of the Brookland-Woodridge Business Men's Association. Louis Bernheimer, who will operate the Newton as a new link in his chain of residential houses, will greet the guests of honor as they arrive and the public via a specially made screen trailer. Only one performance will be given tomorrow night, with music by a Leon Brusiloff string ensemble.

Eternal-Unities Note.

Tonight will be "Missouri Night" at the Roadside Theater production of "In Mizzoura." There being a small kiyoodle that suffers a broken leg in the cast, it would not be surprising if the entire Missouri delegation, led by Senator Bennett Champ Clark, whose father was a close friend of Augustus Thomas, author of the play, should break spontaneously into the strains of "You Gotta Quit Kickin' My Dog Around."

Is Rising Rapidly on the Screen

Having made her film debut as leading woman with Bing Crosby in "Rhythm on the Range," Frances Farmer since has been forging ahead into the top rank of cinema players. She will be seen, beginning Friday, in the principal feminine role in "Exclusive," with Fred MacMurray and Charles Ruggles, at the Earle, and also will appear soon on the screen at RKO-Keith's opposite Edward Arnold in "The Toast of New York." It is in her role in the latter subject that she is pictured above.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, July 27.—Mutterings: I would like to choke those newly rich stars who tell about a new purchase and smirk, "Imagine—it only cost two thousand!" Nervous itch: To stick a pin in Robert Taylor during a love scene and watch him show some real ecotion. Why doesn't Grace Moore get smart and ask for a costar who can sing? Height of something or other: Gypsy Rose Lee, ex-strip dancer, refusing interviews because she "has a right to a private life!" Growl: There ought to be a law against the "prop" smiles film cuties wear for newspaper photos.

WILLIAM POWELL.

Frantic urge: To stalk through the swarming yes-men after a big preview and tell the producer how bad his picture really is. Wondering Muse: Is Mary Astor's favorite song, "I'm going To Sit Right Down and Write Myself a Letter?" Silly Notion: Edna May Oliver in rompers. Secret Ambition: To hear a divorcing screen couple admit that they have no intention of remaining the best of friends. Why does Robert Montgomery insist on that college boy mannerism of "shouldering up" his coat? Imaginable hilarious evening: Conducting a spelling bee with Hollywood's producers as the contestants.

No wonder William Powell is so nonchalant about his career—he banked $360,000 last year. Why doesn't the Brown Derby hire Al Smith as manager? Ode to Mayhem: To ask Joan Crawford to autograph one of the leg-art stills she used to pose for. Diabolical Thought: To invite all the parents of screen kiddies to meet and select "the most remarkable" child in pictures.

Judy Canova, the radio blues singer, makes her movie debut in "Artists and Models," singing a song entitled "Pop Goes the Bubble." She does her warbling in a boarding house bathtub filled with soapy bubbles, and, as she sings, bubbles rise into the air and go pop. Just how the effect was produced . . .

A prop man, out of camera range, pumps gas into the soapy water—helium gas, the kind the "Hindenburg" should have used.

Played golf with Chester Morris today and started swapping funny anecdotes. Chet says the funniest incident in his experience took place on the stage when he was touring the "sticks" in a sketch featuring his father. One night, after they had had considerable difficulty in putting up the living room set they used, his dad came out on the stage to deliver his opening line. "To think, I'm paying $4,000 a year for this point!" As he finished the speech he pounded his fist on the mantel—and one wall of the set caved in.

"Dad was caught off balance, but not for long," Chet said. "Donning an expression of supreme disgust, he turned to the audience and ad libbed, "Now I suppose I'll have to pay damages for that!"

Happened on a set today where scenes were being filmed with a new-born baby — and such excitement! A baby, I discovered, can be kept on the set only two hours a day. It must not be under the lights longer than a total of 20 minutes. It cannot be used in any single scene longer than 30 seconds! And to see that those regulations are enforced, a trained nurse stands on the sidelines with a stop watch. When she signals, every light is instantly doused.

At first glance, I thought the company was playing "Blackouts," but after hearing the martial note in that nurse's commands, I knew it was no game.

Screen Comedies Are Filmed In Spite of 'Helpful' Casts

Cinema Zanies So Enthusiastic About Devising Gags and Laughs They Usually Keep Comic Pictures in Production for Weeks on End.

Hollywood, Calif., July 27.—If the production schedule didn't insist, motion picture comedies probably would never be finished.

There is less routine in the writing and filming of screen comedies than any other branch of the business. The matter of laughs is a ticklish one. Funny people and funny business are both difficult to control.

Accordingly, if the players in "Marry the Girl," Warner Bros. all-star comedy with Frank McHugh, Mary Boland, Hugh Herbert, Carol Hughes, Alan Mowbray, Mischa Auer, Allen Jenkins, Hugh O'Connell and a dozen other cinema zanies had their way, the film would still be in production.

"Marry the Girl," as it is, has an unusually high humor content, say the Wise Men of the West. Nevertheless, as the picture progressed on the sound stages, someone or other of the players or personnel connected with the film would pop up with a new gag. It would seem a shame to let it go, but too many changes and additions would lengthen the production schedule to a point longer than the beard of the prophet.

In making comedies the mental hazard facing the producer is that five-letter word, "l-a-u-g-h." The question is whether a bit of action, a line of dialogue or a facial expression will get a laugh from the audience. Certain things, particularly in the so-called "slapstick" line, are accepted as sure fire. There is less slapstick than formerly in the cinema these days, however, what with "The King and the Chorus Girl," "My Man Godfrey" and similar comedy films setting a new style.

No comedy, Hollywood believes, is funny until it has been howled at in a preview. That is the only gauge producers have before they release a film. Everybody on the set may have laughed all the way through production, but that doesn't count.

Generally, however, when the cast, as in the case of "Marry the Girl," features a galaxy of old hands at evoking laughter, the producer can be fairly certain of his results.

"Marry the Girl" had the longest production schedule of any comedy in the history of the Warner studios. It was in work for eight weeks, during which every possible laugh was injected into the script. Additions and deletions were made until the film emerged as a "laugh entity."

Then it was previewed, and its long production schedule and all-star cast were justified, the first audience having received it with so much hilarity that it had to go back to the cutting rooms so there could be enough spacing between the laughs.

Freddie Bartholomew Steps Up Among the Wage-War Battlers

Guardianship Fight to Double Salary Removes Him From Film, but Establishes Him as One of the Cinema's Top-Flight Rebels.

By Hubbard Keary.

Culver City, Calif., July 27 (AP).—Freddie Bartholomew now can look at any queen in movieland and say, "Hi, yah, pal."

Freddie is having salary trouble. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, preparing to film "Thoroughbreds Don't Cry," indirectly disclosed this when it announced replacement of Bartholomew by Douglas Scott. It was feared Freddie's dispute might get to court and delay production.

Freddie's been getting $1,200 a week, a mere pittance—in view of his value—thinks his aunt and guardian, Myllicent Bartholomew. In a guardianship action last week Myllicent said she was trying to double her adopted son's income.

Maybe it will be settled before you can say "Double or Nothing." The Ritz Brothers decided they weren't getting enough money. After agreeing among themselves (some fun, eh kid?) what they wanted, they marched in to see their boss, Darryl Zanuck.

"We kinda thought . . ." began Jimmy, the fun-loving Ritz.

While Zanuck's reply wasn't enough of a classic to be remembered, especially under the circumstances, it stopped Jimmy. The boys now are said to be sharing $2,400 a week.

You don't travel in the best circles in Hollywood until you've told the treasurer that you can't get along on a measly thousand bucks.

Ginger Rogers, aware that her dancing partner, Fred Astaire, was dragging down more shekels, sat down. It was a very profitable sitting, too.

Janet Gaynor went to Honolulu until her studio met her terms. Jack Oakie went to Mexico. Pictures (Jack wanted more for being so funny in them) and radio contribute $7,500 weekly to the Oakie bank account, one authority estimates.

Fred MacMurray, rushed from one picture to another, went home to catch his breath. He caught his breath when the studio phoned. His salary went up, it is said, from $1,000 to $1,750.

Not all salary arguments conclude like a chapter from the "Arabian Nights. Bette Davis and George Brent returned to work for the same old stipends, but they're happy now.

The little lad who came from England to become a star in "David Copperfield" is in the best company Hollywood boasts.

Boris Karloff Is Star of New Film

Boris Karloff has been assigned the leading role in "Without Warning," which will go into production soon, according to a studio dispatch. Crane Wilbur has written the screen play for the production from the recent New York stage play of the same title. The action of the story revolves around a murder in an army arsenal. John Farrow will direct the picture, and indications at the moment are that Jane Wyman, young featured player who has been forging to the front of late, will draw the feminine lead.

Dick Foran Tests For Color Musical

Dick Foran, hitherto seen chiefly in musical Westerns, is undergoing a series of tests for the role of "The Red Shadow," in Warners' forthcoming Technicolor production of "Desert Song." Foran, who has been carefully groomed for bigger and better roles, has shown excellently in the first black and white tests, according to a studio dispatch. Following these, he will make a series of Technicolor tests in that role. Foran, handsome and possessed of an excellent singing voice, is now considered No. 1 prospect on the Warner lot for the masculine lead in the picture.

ChinesePublish Text Blaming Japan in Crisis

Refused to Meet Peace Moves, Statement by Ministry Holds.

By the Associated Press.

The Chinese Embassy made public last night the following text of a statement issued today by a spokesman of the ministry of foreign affairs at Nanking:

"Although the responsibility for the outbreak of the Lukouchiao incident does not rest with China, the Chinese government, anxious to preserve peace in East Asia, consistently strived for a pacific settlement through the regular diplomatic channels.

"The Chinese minister for foreign affairs repeatedly proposed that a definite date be fixed for mutual withdrawal of troops. Unfortunately Japan not only refused to accept the Chinese proposal, but persisted in sending large reinforcements to North China.

"In the meantime, a settlement was agreed upon by the local Chinese and Japanese military authorities. The Chinese central government raised no objection to the terms of the settlement which are not fundamentally inconsistent with the position it has taken.

"The extreme forbearance of the Chinese government in endeavoring to preserve peace must be plain to all observers. On the other hand, Japan not only failed to withdraw her troops, but continued to send heavy reinforcements into the Peiping and Tientsin area.

"In the night of July 25, the Japanese troops made an unprovoked attack on the Chinese garrison in Langfang, during which a large number of Japanese bombing planes were brought into action. The Japanese further presented impossible demands to the Chinese local authorities and staged a rapid succession of provocative acts in the outskirts of Peiping.

"All these clearly indicate that the Japanese are bent on aggravating the present crisis with the view of achieving sinister designs in North China. China has exhausted her efforts for peace and the responsibility for future developments in North China rests solely with Japan.

Retail Credit Men Elect R. Reichard

Roscoe W. Reichard of the Hecht Co., last night was elected president of the Associated Retail Credit Men of Washington at the organization's annual meeting at the Kenwood Golf and Country Club.

Other officers chosen were Benjamin Blanken of Charles Schwartz & Son, vice president; and John K. Althaus, secretary-treasurer. Abe Coonin, of William Kahn Co., the retiring president, reviewed the organization's activities for the year.

Directors elected included the officers and Leo Baum of the Goldenberg Co.; Landon Burt, of Arthur Burt Co.; Abe Coonin, Charles M. Keefer of S. Kann Sons Co.; Clifton W. Lane of H. The Once Over — By H. I. Phillips

The Bike Is Back.

We may have set our faces against any return to the horse and buggy days, but we are back in the bicycle days. The bicycling craze is sweeping the country and more people are bike enthusiasts than when "scorching" was the big outdoor sport of the mauve decade.

Nobody can quite explain it. It may be just a form of nervousness, a rise of restlessness or a general yen to get away from it all without stopping for gas.

For 25 years when you have heard a bell ring you always associated it with lunch, burglars or a bill collector. Now you just jump out of the way, knowing it's another bike.

The grand thing about it is that it is solving the whole problem of reckless automobile driving. The automobilists have to go slow.

Due to an ever present danger of a bicyclist trying to ride between the front headlights, the car drivers of America are at last exercising caution and restraint.

America and the WPA finish widening all the roads and millions grab a bicycle and take to the unexplored paths.

We complete numbering all the important routes in the country and the people become seized by the urge to go on some narrow winding road where they can get lost and ask directions from some fellow who doesn't know where he is, either.

AWAKENING.

I walk along the city street
Imagining I am
A traveler who lifts his feet
In—let us say—Siam.

The houses are pagodas and
The flagstones are a lawn
Where I, in silent wonder stand
And view the Eastern dawn.

But all the wealth I thus amass
Too soon, alas, assumes
Reality, as autos pass
And fill my head with fumes!

'Young Court' Policy Seen in NewmanChoice

Senate Expected to Approve Police Judge Quickly.

go to the court from the Department of Justice, where he is a special attorney in the claims department. Of athletic build and brisk and energetic, he is popular in Washington legal and business circles.

Court attaches said that in appointing him, the President is continuing his policy of infusing young and forward-looking men into the District's judicial system. Other "young judges" appointed have been Judge Edward M. Curran and Judge Walter Casey, with whose "general reorganization program," Newman declared he was in accord Judge John P. McMahon, the presiding judge, is expected to receive a reappointment.

Since Newman had the indorsement of Senators Wagner, Bankhead, McKellar and George, and local Democratic leaders, quick Senate approval is anticipated.

The new judge was educated in Friends Select School, Central Hill School, George Washington University and National University. He received his law degree from the latter school in 1925, and soon thereafter was admitted to the District bar.

The first legal experience was obtained in the office of the United States District Attorney here, under whom he served as an assistant.

From that position he went to the Federal Radio Commission, now the Communications Commission, where he worked three years. Later he was an aide in the office of the National Recovery Administration. He has been with the Department of Justice since the NRA "folded."

In his new position he will have a salary of $8,000 annually. His term of office will be six years. He has been married for nine years and lives with his wife at 2608 Tilden street. They have no children.

He is the son of Enos Newman, who has lived in Washington for many years, and a nephew of the late Edward A. Newman, who was at one time Democratic national committeeman for the District.

Although disclaiming any special hobbies other than "the legal profession," he is fond of Chows, swimming and "reading of all descriptions."

It is understood that the President shortly will reappoint Judge McMahon, whose third term with the Police Court expired last January. Then the "local patronage problem," which has bee kept alive since the expiration of Judge Hitt's term last winter, will have been settled. More than 30 names have been considered in connection with the two judgeships.

police and juvenile courts who retired at 65 after 12 years service, and one-third pay to those who retired at 60. Under this bill, the only persons the District would have to pay at the outset would be Judge Hitt, former Judge Mary O'Toole, of the Municipal Court, and former Judge Kathryn Sellers, of the Juvenile Court. A subcommittee of the House District Committee has held hearings on the bill, but has never made a report on it.

Looking back over his long service on the bench, Judge Hitt said last night that one of the things that impressed him was the fact that more and more young offenders have been haled before him in recent years.

"The age of a big majority," he said, "would appear to be much younger than it was 12 years ago. This may be partly due to traffic violations. Many of them are brought in for speeding and the like. But that isn't the sole answer. In robbery, grand larceny and petit larceny cases, many of the offenders are 17, 18 and 19. When I first went on the bench the average such offender was between 25 and 30."

Judge Hitt emphasized the need of additional judges for the Police Court. At present, he pointed out, there is no provision for vacations for the four judges. If one becomes ill—Judge Hitt is now recovering from a two-month attack of the "flu," which he contracted in the poorly ventilated courtroom—the chief justice of the District Supreme Court appoints a judge from the Municipal Court to relieve him.

"There certainly should be one extra judge to handle jury cases," Hitt said. "We have an average of ten demands a day for jury trials. One judge can't handle that many efficiently."

4,000 Police Guard George in Belfast

Belfast, Northern Ireland, July 27 (AP).—Four thousand special police moved into Belfast today to help line the 12-mile route along which King George and Queen Elizabeth will travel tomorrow on their coronation visit to Ulster.

Every person occupying a window to view the monarchs will have to be able to give an account of himself.

Authorities said this order was a "formality only, as the district is intensely loyal." It was known, however, they were concerned lest Catholic and Protestant enmity, which has marked Belfast's history for 50 years, should break out on the occasion of the royal visit.

Musician's Dog Bars Manager From Ballroom

But It's Only Because Pet at Glen Echo Park Wants to Go for Walk.

By Chanticleer

So, it has come to pass that the managing director of the Glen Echo Park enterprises, Leonard B. Schloss, is practically forbidden to enter the park's Spanish Garden Ballroom. It's all because of Jerry. You see, Jerry is the English bulldog, owned by Maestro David McWilliams, whose orchestra provides the music for the dancers who visit Glen Echo. This Jerry, upon seeing the approaching managing director, makes a mad dash for him, completely disrupting the band, all because Jerry wants to be taken for a stroll around the park and meet the customers. But he insists that the manager, but only the manager, act as his nursemaid.

Incidentally, pretty Kitty Simons is a great favorite with the dance crowd. She does the vocals with McWilliams' musical outfit.

There was laughter in the soft, coal-black eyes of Joan English on a recent night, as she sat piano-atop in the King Cole room, and sent her vibrant voice into every cool corner of that spot to warm the hearts of all those present. That laughter danced there, not because she was inwardly laughing, but because she was tremendously pleased. And, indeed, why not? There before her stood one of the King Cole room's patrons who had moved from his table to better gaze upon the young lady.

Lurking just 3 miles south of Alexandria on the Richmond highway is the new night club metropolis, hewn out of the forest primeval by sturdy Scout Nightingale. There is the spot for dancing . . . and real dancing to the music of Watson Powell and his ten-piece dance band. America owes much to the Club Nightingale for postponing its arrival until after the opening of the West, for had it offered then, as it does today, the attractive incentive of those seeking adventure, the West would still be nothing but a stretch of wasteland, harboring the fierce Injun and the noble buffalo.

This might be dedicated to the Greater National Capital Committee, or the chamber of commerce, if the Capital had a chamber of commerce. A truthful gentleman encountered three different parties of people on the Shoreham Terrace this week, and each of the three groups had "come from the shore to cool off." If there's a genle breeze a-blowing, it's pretty sure to waft softly over the Shoreham Terrace. Adding to the charms with which nature endowed the terrace are the choice foods and the fine liquors. There's entertainment, too, between dances from Barnee's baton—Maxim Loew's Orchestra; Towne and Knott, society dancers; Three Sensational Saxons, hand-balancing artists, and Lew Hoffman, magician with the hats.

Here we are back again at the Rainbow Room in the Hamilton Hotel . . . the home of Ginger Lee, red-headed siren of song . . . whose torch singing has brought many a willing male back to the nightery again and again . . . and her songs are worth hearing, too.

The Three M's, at the Hi Hat, are said to have inspired some amateur disciple of Longfellow or Burns the other evening, when the backs of the menus were discovered to be covered with verse. The boys do a fine job at entertainment and the poet could easily have been inspired to do his work.

The winner of the second audition in the "Quest for Talent Contest," being held at the Metronome Room of the Wardman Park Hotel for Government employes, is Miss Enid Mitchell. Miss Mitchell, a soprano, is from the Rural Electrification Administration. She opened her engagement of one week Monday, singing the ever-popular tune, "Little Old Lady." It was the song that won the contest for her. The third audition will be held tomorrow night.

As Pepys would say: "Up betimes and did stroll about town until weary and worn from the heat. A lethargic gloom encompassed the entire city until, come nightfall, I sought the solace of nearby pub. Brinkley's (it's at 533 Eighth street southeast) offered a most refreshing retreat. Sitting here I pondered upon the delights of such a spot and how a man's feelings can change with his environments. About me was laughter, joy, and a carefree attitude." Well, what if Pepys did not say it? If he did he certainly could have said it much better, for a master of prose describing a fine spot in the entertainment field, the result would have been a triumph in composition.

It's going to be tough sledding at the Mayfair this week for the entertainers. Jack Campbell of the piano Campbells at the Cafe of All Nations took it upon himself to bruise a knee several weeks ago . . . now he is among those not present . . . in short, dear readers, for the time being, Jack is at home with a very bad knee. Tough, young fellow . . . hurry back . . . Leo and Beverly are doing the work.

Fish Loses Job, Sees 'Reprisal' By Roosevelt

Bankhead Denies Order to Keep New Yorker Off Fair Commission.

The tangled Congressional situation resulting from demands of Representative Hamilton Fish (Republican), of New York, that the joint tax investigating committee study the returns of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt went into deeper complications yesterday.

As the tax committee plowed ahead toward a bill plugging loopholes in the tax laws, Fish charged Speaker William B. Bankhead and President Roosevelt with "a contemptible act of reprisal for my attacks on the tax hearings fiasco."

Fish asserted "the President has issued orders that I am not to serve as minority House representative on the 1939 New York World's Fair Commission. Speaker Bankhead, following orders, has refused to appoint me, according to the press dispatches."

Bankhead, biting his words off icily, told reporters: "I will not appoint Mr. Fish. I am not acting at the request of the White House. Mr. Snell (Bertrand H. Snell, New York, House minority leader) is to give me another name tomorrow."

Other members said there was no doubt the Speaker, ordinarily a tolerant leader, was angered "beyond the limits of patience" at Fish's continued harpooning of the tax investigation.

Fish said, "This means the minority now has no rights whatever of representation under the Fascist set-up."

The committee, meanwhile, under Chairman Robert L. Doughton (Democrat), North Carolina, continued its study of personal holding companies. While final decision was not reached, tentative approval was given to a suggestion that deductions be drastically reduced and rates be boosted stiffly.

Robert H. Jackson, Assistant Attorney General, will appear at an open hearing today to tell Republicna members the basis for his advice to Mrs. Roosevelt that she had no liability on tax returns on a radio contract, proceeds of which went to charity.

After each broadcast, $3,000 went to a charity, and Fish's contention is that Mrs. Roosevelt thus used a loophole to avoid taxes.

Jackson gave Mrs. Roosevelt the advice before she began broadcasting in 1934, when he was chief counsel of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Yesterday Roswell Magill, acting Secretary of the Treasury in the vacation absence of Secretary Henry Morgenthau, jr., wrote Fish the bureau often gives taxpayers advice on how to figure particular transactions in their tax returns.

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

In defense of the South player in today's hand, and of the highly optimistic contract reached solely through his own efforts, I must explain that he was partnered to a player who nine times out of ten must be hoisted to the proper spot with a derrick—a player, in short, who usually underrates his cards from 40 to 80 per cent.

South, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
2 ♠	Pass	2 N T	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
4 N T	Pass	5 ♣	Pass
5 N T	Pass	6 ♠	Pass
7 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

As may be seen, South bid the grand slam practically single-handed, but not entirely so. North helped along with a bad bid on the last round. His response to four notrump was correct—a sign-off in the lowest bid suit—but he should have adopted the same policy as a further sign-off over five notrump. On his actual bid of five spades, South decided to gamble that he held as good as four spades to a Queen and either a doubleton heart or heart Queen, or possible the diamond King.

Although the contract was far from good, South went a long way toward justifying it by his play. The moment the diamond King was opened, he saw that there was only one chance—and that one remote—for winning 13 tricks. The losing heart in his own hand could be disposed of in only one way. Winning the first lead, he cashed the Ace of spades and led to dummy's Queen, then boldly led out four rounds of clubs, discarding one of dummy's hearts. Had one of these clubs been ruffed by the defender with the remaining trump, it would have been just too bad—there was nothing South could do about it.

As it happened, fortune favored his desperate play. West had to follow to the four clubs and also to the Ace-King and a low heart that followed. Dummy ruffed the third heart with the three of trumps and declarer then ruffed a diamond to re-enter his hand and picked up West's Jack of trumps.

Obviously, the play would not have succeeded had West held fewer than four clubs and three hearts. But this does not detract from declarer's play—he adopted the one line that had any chance of success.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Her Beau Won't Come to "Definite Understanding" About Marriage; Should She Give Him Up, Girl Asks.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl of 25 and I have been going with a young man of 29 for the past three years. I have been with him constantly in all times of distress, good fortune and bad luck. He tells me I am the very best friend he has ever had. He tells me he loves me. Now, I want to get married. He wants to get married, too, but somehow will not commit himself at this time. He's afraid.

* * * *

I have had it out with him that unless we come to a definite understanding, I never want to see, hear or talk to him again—remaining friends, however. He will not let me go, but persistently keeps after me with telephone calls, letters and telegrams. I love him very much; too much to lose him entirely, although my level head tells me I should give him up if he can't come to some definite arrangement.

* * * *

Tell me—am I being foolish in allowing myself to be dragged on waiting for him to make up his mind? Does he love me or has he been fooling me? What is my wisest move? Thank you for an answer.

DESPERATE.

The Thing to Do.

DEAR DESPERATE: You are being very foolish indeed if you are giving this man your whole time and attention, while waiting for him to make up his mind whether or not he wants to marry you now, later or never. The traditional remedy for loosening a tongue-tied suitor's tongue is to get another suitor. It's a remedy which has an amazingly high percentage of success when determinedly employed. To know that you are going about with another man, or other men, with your mind made up to marry, will bring this man to matrimonial terms far more speedily than will any amount of verbal aggression—in the way of argument, appeal, reproach or ultimatum.

* * * *

I daresay he does love you in a selfish fashion and hasn't been "fooling" you in saying so; but alas, he thinks he knows only too well how much you love him and how willingly you would say "yes" if only he popped the question. Sufficient for him, apparently, is this tacit possession of yourself. Only through very serious threat of losing you irrevocably can a forthright proposal be elicited at this late date.

* * * *

If your are accustomed to going about with other men, and this has failed to rouse his jealously, then I would advise you to create the impression that you have, rather unexpectedly, become deeply interested in another man, with an interest that leaves you puzzled as to the true nature and durability of your erstwhile devotion to this one. The best way to capture and hold aggressive interest of the average man is to keep him guessing to the very altar. And even afterward, it's the wise woman who never puts all her cards on the table face up for her husband to read.

M. H.

More Friends for "A. T."

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: After reading "A. T.'s" letter to you in The Post of July 22, and your very understanding answer to her, I wish to convey to her an invitation to come to our Christian Endeavor Society meetings. From my own observation since I have joined the Society and especially since I have been elected President, I feel that there is no other group of young people in a better position to help lonely youngsters overcome unhappiness, sorrow, shyness—anything that is keeping them from enjoying life—than the Christian Endeavorers of the churches.

* * * *

The movement is inter-denominational. "A. T." could find such a Society in almost any church, but we would be delighted to have her with us at Wallace Memorial United Presbyterian Church, Randolph street and New Hampshire avenue northwest. It just happens that we are having our meeting on August 1 at Fenwick Beach. We have been invited down to a cottage there. Do you think "A. T." would like to join us for the day? . . .

* * * *

I am sure you understand the spirit in which I have sent this note, and I do hope something can be done for "A. T." With sincere good wishes for the work you are doing, and with the hope that "A. T." will follow your advice, I am, sincerely, VIVIAN ESSEX.

* * * *

Cause of Loneliness.

DEAR MISS ESSEX: Thank you for this invitation to "A. T." With such a splendid spirit of good will and friendship abroad in the world, it's amazing that persons should find themselves as desperately lonely as she. I wonder if a great measure of responsibility for their lonely state doesn't rest on the shoulders of such afflicted persons? Could it be that they are too shortsighted to recognize and avail themselves of the myriad opportunities which exist for making friends and developing satisfactory active lives?

* * * *

One who is trained from childhood to participate in group activities, to lend himself to really self-forgetful effort on behalf of others, is almost never without a saving measure of personal happiness, regardless of what adversities and tragedies may beset his path. With you, I trust that "A. T." will follow my advice to the extent of investigating the constructive possibilities of church affiliation. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

CAPITAL MANNERS

Hostess Should Master Art of Ending Meal Gracefully.

By Margaret Wallace

HOW TO END a meal gracefully and marshal the guests back to the drawing room is a problem to a young Washington hostess. She writes:

"DEAR MISS WALLACE: When do I rise from the table at the end of a dinner? Should this be a signal for my guests to rise also? Recently we entertained some gentlemen and when I rose to leave they rose also but remained in the dining room with my husband. At a dinner we attended recently the hostess remained at the table talking for almost an hour after the meal was finished and had coffee served there.

"When I reproached my husband for not bringing the guests to the drawing room after dinner but remaining in the dining room to talk to them, he was very scornful of my ignorance and said that it is usual for men to remain in the dining room after a dinner to take an extra drink or two and talk. Of course I have heard about this custom in what we might call fashionable society. We are just plain people. I do not think even society people would let the hostess—the only woman in the party—wait in the drawing room while the men of the party drank and talked in the dining room."

Rules Are Flexible.

There is no rule in regard to the length of time guests remain in the dining room after a dinner. The hostess, of course, sets the example. When she rises to leave, the guests rise also and follow her into the drawing room. It is perfectly proper for the host to indicate to the men of the party that they remain in the dining room for a talk and extra drink after he or one of the men present has escorted the hostess to the dining room door. This custom is not confined to so-called fashionable society. It does not make any difference if there is only one woman present. It is however considered very rude in all circles of society for men to remain in the dining room for more than 20 minutes after the women have left.

One of the easiest and most graceful ways to "transfer" the guests from the dining room to the drawing room after dinner is by serving coffee in the drawing room. However, it is a custom enjoyed by many family groups to linger at the dinner table and for a family social half-hour or hour.

The clever hostess has no hard and fast rules as just when to leave the table. If the conversation is interesting and all the guests are taking a general part in it she will not interrupt it too soon. For it is conversation alone that makes any kind of a dinner party successful. The wise hostess will not interrupt until she thinks there is an appropriate pause.

Reminder for Men.

QUERY—My husband always keeps the men in the dining room for an hour or more after a dinner party. It is very embarrassing for me as the women all seem restless and wonder why the men stay away so long. One time he kept them there so long that all the guests had to leave as soon as the men came from the dining room. How soon should the men join the women guests?

ANSWER—The usual time is 20 minutes, but any time over a half hour is considered very rude. It would be proper to send the maid or the butler with a message to your husband asking "the gentlemen to join the ladies in the drawing room." This message should be delivered unobtrusively, of course, and should only be entrusted to a servant who could deliver it in such a manner.

Recipe Contest.

IF YOU have an interesting recipe using apples, enter it in The Post Recipe Contest for this week. You may win one of the five cash prizes. These are $3 for the first prize, $2 for second prize and $1 for each of the additonal three prizes.

Whatever your recipe may be for apple pie, apple sauce, apple salad, apple dumplings, apple tarts or apple ice cream or any other apple dish, copy it neatly and send it to Rebekah Blake, The Post food editor, so she will receive it not later than Saturday noon. Be sure to write your name and address clearly on your recipe.

Only one recipe will be accepted from each contestant.

Giving Other Fellow a Chance Is Main Lesson of Group Play

Mrs. Ruth Britt, Playground Director, Believes Practice of Fair Dealing Is Greatest Asset Children Derive From Supervised Recreation.

By Malvina Lindsay.

THE MOTHER who says, "I want Junior to play with other children so he will be able to hold his own in the world later on," is missing more than half the point. The lesson of "Give the other fellow a chance" is the biggest thing Junior can learn from his association with his playfellows, believes Mrs. Ruth Britt, who has been director for 11 years at the Rosedale Playground, in the Northeast district, where from 1,200 to 1,600 children and adults gather daily for recreation.

Watching hundreds of children virtually grow up on the playground and then "graduate," Mrs. Britt is convinced that the most valuable thing they took with them into the world from their supervised play was a sense of social co-operation and good sportsmanship.

"Of course, group play does a great deal for the child in helping him to take care of himself," she said. "He learns self-reliance, he is prevented from becoming too self-centered, and he has an opportunity to develop whatever qualities for leadership he may possess. But I do believe that the most valuable thing he learns is good sportsmanship—playing for the love of the game instead of only to win, and playing fair with the other fellow."

Frown on "Star" System.

In all the games on the playground the ideal of good sportsmanship is emphasized. The "star" system is played down. Captains and managers of teams are urged to give the poorer players a chance. It is the good all-round team that sought rather than the winning team.

"We try to make the children, even from the toddlers up, feel that winning the game is not the whole end of play," said Mrs. Britt. "We try to teach them the love of the game for its own sake and to give the other fellow a chance to play too."

Even a child of kindergarten age can catch this spirit of play, Mrs. Britt believes. But there must be adult supervision, she warns. Children, if left entirely to themselves at play, are apt to revert to the "every fellow for himself and the devil take the hindmost" theory. The strong are apt to impose on the weak and to become bullies instead of leaders.

"That is why I believe strongly in children of all ages being sent to playgrounds or other places where there is supervised play," she said. "If a mother can not do this, she can assemble some children in her own back yard and give general supervision to their play. While at times children at play may be left to their own devices in order to encourage their initiative, they invariably need some direction. All parents should know how their children are playing and should be prepared to step in and direct the play activities."

Suggestion for Mother.

Here are some of the things, according to Mrs. Britt, that the average mother in directing her children's play should emphasize:

First, see that all children get equal opportunity in the games and that all the rules are observed.

Second, teach the children to get joy and happiness out of the game, to look upon it as fun and recreation, not as something to be taken too seriously and solely for the sake of winning.

Third, encourage leadership and make the leader feel a sense of responsibility toward the other children.

Fourth, encourage initiative and originality whenever they show any outcroppings and direct activity along that line.

The sense of fair play, long believed a prerogative of the masculine sex, exists just as strongly in girls as in boys, Mrs. Britt maintains. "Girls are just as good sports as boys and some are a lot better," she said.

Moreover, in spite of the great development of strenuous feminine sports, girls still have the urge to "play house," Mrs. Britt reports.

"Every now and then we have waves of housekeeping and store keeping sweep over the playground," she said. "Playhouses, ornamented with broken dishes and glass, will make their appearance, and dolls will be brought from home. However, as a whole girls do not play with dolls as much as they used to. Perhaps that is because so many other games have been devised."

The problem of discipline seldom arises at the playground, Mrs. Britt finds. "When children are interested in their play discipline usually takes care of itself," she said.

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

DON'T THINK that mannikins are the only ones who can prance proudly about in advance fall models at the fashion shows. A room can practically prance, too, we'll have you know, because we went to a fashion show of interior decoration the other day and saw a preview of fashions in fall furnishings. These rooms looked down their noses in the best manner and all but paraded their smartness for the guests to see.

It was at a newly opened model house not far from where we live, furnished in an interesting interpretation of modern and traditional designs in decoration. As a harbinger of new fashions in furnishings, we're certain that it represents many trends worth watching.

THE ALL-OVER FIGURED CARPET, for instance. That has been out of style for so long that most of us remember it only in funny antiquated little houses of old ladies in our childhood. But interior decorators are using it more and more . . . many of their favored patterns are quite Victorian with their big sprawly designs. Others have French or Georgian character and a few are rather modern in motif. These carpets are in 27-inch widths and the seams don't seem to matter any more.

GRAYED AND SUBTLE COLORINGS. We've been harping on that trend for many months, so we hope you're prepared for the fact that it is really here. You'll want your greens in dull almost drab versions—olive and bottle green in place of the clear emerald tones that formerly were tops. You'll want dusty rose tones instead of the clear corals, and you'll adore the "between" blues that are coming into the fashion picture. You'll love the new beige shades—creamy, pinkish versions rather than brownish or yellowish as of yore. And the dull yellows, the tarnished golds, the mustard tones are simply stunning.

DARK WALLS WITH LIGHT FLOOR COVERINGS. This is a dramatic and fascinating combination that is growing in importance. Many of the light floor coverings are very impractical. Others are much more usable than they appear at first glance. For example, the texture weaves and the subtle two-tone patterns give the effect of a plain color, but have enough pattern to keep foot marks from shining out.

MODERN COLORS WITH PERIOD ACCESSORIES. There is a wide use of old porcelains and traditional accessories and period furniture in brilliantly modern backgrounds.

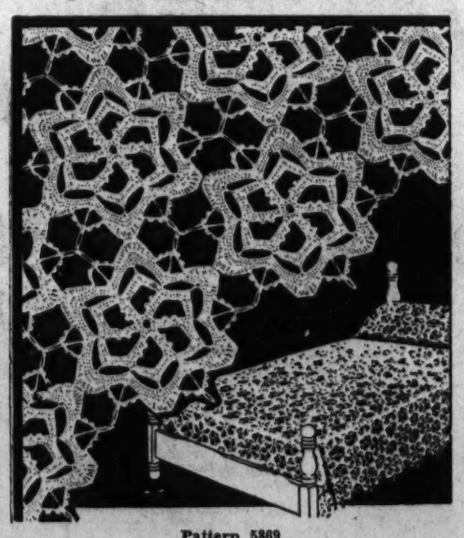
Easy Pattern, Simple Stitches Create an Unusual Bedspread



Pattern 5869

By Alice Brooks.

SIMPLE STITCHES—an easy pattern—a striking motif make a bedspread that is unusual in its rich beauty. Its durability makes it something to hand on from generation to generation. Inexpensive to crochet in natural or colored string. Use it to dress up your own bedroom or add a luxurious note to your guest room. You can make a lovely matching scarf, using finer cotton. In pattern 5869 you will find complete instructions for making the medallion shown; an illustration of it and of all the stitches used; material requirements; a photograph of the medallion.

To obtain this pattern send 10 cents in stamps or coin (coin preferred) to The Washington Post, Household Arts Dept., 259 W. 14th Street, New York, N. Y. Be sure to write plainly your name, address and pattern number.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, July 27.

THE SPA has started its month of activity, which means that the summer high spot in the life of New York State now is under way. In other words, the racing season at Saratoga, those 30 wondrous days, now is in progress, and everyone within cannon shot of this town who wants to be smart, who likes to bet on the bang-tails and who is interested in the improvement of the breed, is there.

ALICE HUGHES.

There is nothing anywhere near New York to equal Saratoga in August. Those fantastic hotels 100 years ago, such as the Grand Union; the spattering of marvelous elderly people, the younger racing set, represented by Jock and C. V. Whitney, and an amazing assortment of New York gamblers make up the most colorful crowd to be found in our part of the country during the summer.

The racing plant itself has been known as "beautiful Saratoga," and lives up to its billing. Not only is the track a lovely place to spend a summer afternoon, but it is filled with real romance and has that priceless quality of true color.

* * * *

Racing only fills the afternoons. The evenings at the Spa must be filled somehow, and this is taken care of by a half dozen of the most elaborate and costly night clubs and gambling houses this country ever has known. Whatever the horses leave you, the roulette tables get, which is as it should be, I suppose. Undoubtedly, from the strictest point of view, Saratoga is a vicious and evil place. But, oh, it is so beautiful and so much fun! If this be treason, make the most of it.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—As soon as Mr. Rudy Vallee put on his hair net and left the Hotel Astor Roof for the Fair at Dallas, Tex., an old-timer, who never has lost his punch arrived to take his place. This is Ted Lewis, whom I knew first as Mr. Freedman, of Circleville, Ohio, owing to the fact that in my youth I was a close friend of a young Circleville girl who regarded Freedman as the town's leading citizen, even then. It pleases me and thousands of others that old Ted and his battered-top hat are packing the Broadway Roof Garden with young folk who like to shake a foot . . .

A new book struck the desk this week which I think will be of great value to many of us. If you are a nervous hostess, as I am, it seems to me that Toni Taylor's book, "R. S. V. P., a Book of Parties," will answer most of our most pressing problems. In rushing through this volume, I think Toni has answered most of the questions that used to leave me practically at the end of a limb . . .

* * * *

The serious things of life, I'm glad to say, are at last receiving the proper attention here. It has just been announced that at the great New York University next fall there will be a series of lectures on jazz music as part of the general music curriculum. In charge of this vital matter will be no less a personage than Vincent Lopez, who for many years has been the leading pianist in this field of art. So if you feel that your life is not complete without academic training in the art of razz-a-matazz, you may as well report to Prof. Lopez next fall—and may God have mercy on your soul . . .

* * * *

It seems to me that the classic American joke always has concerned putting sand in the sugar or watering the milk. But it remained for our village really to prove the third of these historic stories. A butcher, Philip d'Avanza, has stepped before a local judge and paid a fine of $100. The proven charge was that this steak-pounder, when asked for a few lamb chops, placed said chops on the scale and at the same time bore down on a wooden pedal under the counter, which ran the chops up to about twice the weight. Proving all over again that the things you hear over the radio occasionally do come true.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Logan Clendening.

Heat Cuts Efficiency.

Summer is notoriously a period when office efficiency sinks to a lower level. This indicates that physical factors, especially temperature and ventilation, have a considerable role to play in maintaining a high level of office efficiency.

A recent survey was carefully conducted in 50 of the country's larger offices. The factors of noise, posture, air conditions, and food and drink were scientifically studied and tabulated. A definite need for pick-me-up measures, particularly in midafternoon, was evident. Corrective measures are on the increase, usually beginning in executive offices and simmering down to the workers.

An increase in the habit of drinking tea in the office during the afternoon is an interesting observation, especially to one who has just returned from England, where he found office managers regularly having a cup of tea brought to their desks about 4:30 in the afternoon. It is supposed that this and other pick-me-up measures will change the 4 o'clock slump into the "bright idea" hour.

Noise is as severe a drain on the physical organism. First, it makes the hearing and understanding of instructions, conversation and telephone calls difficult, thus increasing errors. Second, concentration of effort against the competing noise of machinery causes an increased straining of all voluntary muscles. Third, intermittent noises are natural magnets for attention, distracting the worker from his task in hand. Fouth, raising the voice to make one's voice understood causes strain. Fifth, noises above a certain loudness appear to precipitate a biological fear-reaction manifested by heightened tension of both voluntary and involuntary muscles, inhibited intestinal movements and diminished secretion of the digestive glands.

Air conditions have greatly improved in the United States. It seems impossible to believe that only a short time ago we were content to let our almost unbearable summers influence the temperature of our offices, restaurants and theaters. With the wide popularization of air conditioning in public places, it is an easy prediction that not only offices, but homes, in the near future will be air conditioned in the winter time against cold.

One metal manufacturer's office reported that air conditioning earned 7½ cents per worker per day. A report from a newspaper office employing an average of 2,500 persons, was to the effect that lost time was almost cut in half by air conditioning.

In many offices fatigue susceptibility in the morning is recognized as due to an inadequate breakfast, and time off for a mid-morning chocolate is becoming the fashion.

Fliers Tell of Pole Hop At Embassy Reception

Many Notables Among 500 Guests at Fete for Men Who Set New Long Distance Record.

By Dudley Harmon.

The three intrepid Soviet fliers who made the new distance record across the North Pole from Moscow to California have, besides courage, something not always associated with communism—a sense of humor. As large an audience as could be mustered for a mid-summer reception discovered this last evening at the party given in honor of the three by the Counselor of the Russian Embassy and Mme. Oumansky.

The hosts did a wise thing in arranging for the fliers to tell about their trip. They speak not a word of English, but instead of being left to stare and be stared at, the three each spoke briefly on various angles of their flight, their words being interpreted sentence by sentence by Mr. Oumansky.

The elaborate salon of the Embassy somewhat resembled a schoolroom, with gilt chairs placed in rows all around and a huge map standing on a platform, marked with the route of the fliers. The three heroes displayed a modest demeanor, and in spite of the fact they speak only Russian, the charm of their personalities "got across." In fact, Hollywood thought Capilot Yumosheff so attractive it offered him a movie contract which he declined.

Too Much Food For Polar Flying.

Making occasional wisecracks with the most serious expressions, the fliers threw a human interest sidelight, as well as a scientific one, on their trip. It seems that in their comrades' eagerness to help propare for the flight enough concentrated food was offered to last them half a year. "If we had taken all that was offered," said Comrade Yumocheff, "we would never have reached here. A doctor gives us a medicine cabinet weighing ten kilograms, which we reduced by ten kilograms."

The fliers told how they were so warm over the North Pole they took off their heavy coats, and how over California it was warmest of all. They felt so sure of themselves and their plane, they said, that two of them slept for many miles going across the ice and stretches of water.

Several Russian-speaking members of the audience—yes, there were actually a few—helped Mr. Oumansky find the English equivalents for some of the words. Among those who "helped out" were the Finnish Minister, Eero Jarnefelt; the Latvian Minister, Alfred Bilmanis, and Witold Wankoficz, Counselor of the Polish Embassy.

After the reception, the fliers stood with Mr. Oumansky near the doorway and answered further questions.

Many Distinguished Guests Are Present.

Among last evening's guests were the Czechoslovakian Minister and Mme. Hurban; Jules Henry, Charge d'Affaires of the French Embassy; Senators Green and Capper; Representative Byron Scott, who was accompanied by his daughter, Miss Scott, and Nathan Bartelett, his secretary.

Heywood Broun, columnist, was present last evening and stood in the doorway listening to the speeches. Others there were Jay Pierrepont Moffat, recently named head of the European division of the State Department, and Mr. and Mrs. John Farr Simmons and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Eustis Bohlen, also of the department.

Mrs. J. Hamilton Lewis and Mrs. William E. Borah were among Senatorial wives who attended the party. The latter wore a black and white silk print. Others there were Edwin Smith, a member of the National Labor Relations Board; Denys Smith, correspondent of the London Post; the Spanish Ambassador, with his pretty daughter, who wore a pink and white linen evening frock; the Commercial Counselor of the Swedish Legation and Mme. Wijkman, and Mrs. Wallace Lind, wife of Commander Lind.

Dr. Edelin Wed To Miss Keech

Of Interest to Washingtonians was the marriage of Dr. Edward J. Edelin, jr., and Miss Mary Keech yesterday in Bryantown, Md. The scene of the ceremony was St. Mary's Church and the Rev. Thomas J. McKew officiated. ciated.

Dr. and Mrs. Edelin are now on their way to Atlantic City for their wedding trip.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Wiley Keech, of Bryantown and the groom is the son of the State's Attorney for Charles County, and Mrs. Edward J. Edelin.

Among the guests from out of town were William J. Neale, of Washington; Mr. and Mrs. Aubry Mudd, of Richmond, and Mrs. Sally Wright, of Baltimore.

Dr. Edelin is a graduate of Georgetown University and is at present an interne at Providence Hospital.

Dinners Precede Play at Roadside

Several prominent Washington residents will entertain at dinner parties before the performance tonight of "In Mizzoura" at the Roadside Theater, and will take their guests on to the play.

Among those going are Senator Bennett Champ Clark, Representative Clyde Williams and Representative Wood.

Others who will bring their guests to the theater are Mrs. Charles W. Friede, Jesse M. Jones, Harry C. Hensley, Mrs. Howard L. Hodgkins, Mrs. Frederick Shelton and Mrs. T. A. Sappington.

Augustus Thomas, the author of the play, was such a close friend of Senator Clark's father, the late Champ Clark, that the playwright, out of courtesy to the former, set his story in his home town of Bowling Green. The Senator tells the story of how his father was so angry at Thomas' temerity in putting a train robber in Bowling Green that he walked out of the theater at the end of the second act.

The grounds of Mr. Down's home, which is built on a hill overlooking the river, slope down to the beach and there chairs and tables were set out for the lunch of fried chicken, potato salad, sandwiches, cakes, fruit and drink.

Before supper several of the guests, including Mrs. Gerald Linke, Herbert Scholz, First Secretary of the German Embassy, and Hans Thomsen, also of the embassy, played a few rounds of croquet. There was baseball and other sports, and after lunch the guests made their way up the hill to the house for the amusements in the playroom.

The other guests were Mrs. Sims Snow, wearing smart blue slacks; Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Exnicios, the Misses Betty Beale, Sally Holmes, Mary Montgomery and Carolyn Chantry, who wore a red sports suit; Robert Witthoeft-Emden, Naval Attache of the German Embassy; Ricardo Siri, Second Secretary of the Argentine Embassy; Ditlef Knudsen, Attache of the Norwegian Legation, and C. A. R. Wastfelt, of the Swedish Legation.

Mr. Stephen B. Gibbons to Watch America's Cup Race From Cutter

Assistant Secretary of Navy to Represent Coast Guard at Newport; Mr. Farley, Miss Perkins to Accompany Him.

By Elizabeth Ford.

Possibly no one within inches of Newport will get as good a view of the classic race for the America's Cup as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Stephen B. Gibbons, who will watch it all from the deck of the Coast Guard cutter, George M. Bibb, on July 31 and August 2.

This is his second time as ambassador plenipotentiary of the Coast Guard at the international sail show. With him, as official guests, will be Postmaster General James M. Farley, Secretary of Labor Frances E. Perkins and other Cabinet members who will get away from their desks here in Washington to go to see. The cutter, Champlain, also will carry official spectators.

Mrs. Gibbons is across the Pacific in Honolulu, where she is vacationing with her daughter, Ann, and making the Royal Hawaiian her headquarters in the midst of a round of parties. They will return to Washington September 1.

Secretary Gibbons himself confesses to never having handled a boat, but he is an aviator and knows all about amphibian planes. Later in the season he will be on deck for the President's Cup Regatta, and if you were there, you saw him at the Poughkeepsie water dash in June.

He remembers the time when the boats did not cover the 30-mile stretch off Newport in the specified five hours because of adverse wind . . . but he hopes confidently that nothing like that will happen this time.

The primary duty of the Coast Guard, which is sending five cruising cutters and four of its 165-foot patrol boats to Newport, is to make sure that the course of the race is kept clear and that spectators don't anchor in the area to be covered by the contestants.

Secretary Gibbons is in charge also of the Coast Guard's mammoth preparations for broadcasting arrangements and for transportation and communication facilities for the sailors of the press. There will be two planes on duty for sky patrol.

Miss Preston's Marriage Is Set For Next Month

James Wilkins Will Wed Arlington Girl on August 7.

An announcement of interest to Washingtonians is the marriage of Miss Mildred Preston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds M. Preston, of Arlington, Va., to Mr. James Lawrence Wilkins, also of Arlington, which will take place August 7 in St. Charles Catholic Church in Clarendon with the Rev. Father Kenneth M. Rizer officiating, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Immediately following the ceremony a reception will be held at the home of the bride.

Miss Preston will have as her matron of honor her sister, Mrs. Earl Purcell, of Washington. Miss Marjorie Preston, another sister, with Miss Ann Crimmins, and Miss Francis Horton, cousins of the bridegroom-elect, of Franklin Park, Va., will be the bridesmaids.

Mr. Wilkins will have as his best man Louis Mann, of Arlington, while the ushers will be Franklin Preston and Howard Preston, brothers of the bride, and Francis Horton.

Mrs. Dickey Ingley Wed To Commander Kitchen

Women's Board of Montgomery County Hospital Feeds 2,000 Guests At Mammoth Annual Dinner in Sherwood High School in Sandy Springs

Chickens Served by Hundreds and Potato Salad by Tubs.

Steady Stream of Visitors Eats in Three Dining Rooms.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Hundreds of chickens, potato salad by the tub, and three "bread lines" or rather "fried chicken-baked ham-and-beaten biscuit-lines" waiting to be served. This was the annual dinner of the Woman's Board of Montgomery County Hospital at Sherwood High School in Sandy Spring last night.

Even if you had no intention of eating, it was worth a trip out to see how the dinner was served—and, of course, before you left you would have eaten, which would have made the jaunt entirely worth while.

Early yesterday morning Mrs. Jack Boyd, general chairman, and her co-workers, assembled at the school building. One room was marked "Food received" and there were brought the vegetables, salad dressing, cakes, candy, eggs, preserves, vegetables and bread for the dinner. Each item was assigned to the chairman of the committee in charge of that part of the menu. In the hallway were shelves for the preserves and jellies at one end of a long table where the butter cutters were at work reducing pound packages to inch-square slices. Nearby were nearly a dozen large cans of cream.

Mix Salad In Large Tub.

On the door of an adjoining room was the sign "Salad." There, at long tables committee members were cutting tomatoes and cucumbers into thin slices or chopping up potatoes and peppers. Across the room were two women preparing the dressing, while a third was mixing the potato salad in a great new wooden tub of a size for a wash day.

Eight women, under the supervision of Mrs. Leonard Burns, fried the chickens in the cooking room of the school. This part of the preparation was all completed before the crowd arrived and the serving began at 5 o'clock. Preparation of additional quantities of salad and other parts of the meal continued until after the serving was over at 7:30.

Committee Works In Hour Shifts.

The members of the committee to whom the serving was delegated worked in hour shifts. One person was assigned to supervise each table and see that the platters of food were constantly replenished. Others assisted in bringing the food from the supply tables.

Although the members of the Woman's Board, which helps support Montgomery County's rural hospital, are chiefly responsible for the success and remarkable organization of the annual dinners, the men lend a hand whereever it is needed. Last night they appeared to be functioning principally as doorkeepers and head waiters; but those are no small details when the size of the crowd is considered. Places for two, four or six incoming guests were indicated as other diners finished and left by the rear of the tent or inside doors of the schoolrooms, while those entering came in another way.

There was neither impatience nor confusion among patrons or committee members. After the dinner was over, there were cake, candy, vegetable, flower and apron tables to be patronized. There was even a counter devoted to millinery with a little mirror hanging on a rack at one end, under a tree, where the customers could try on the hats. A grab bag and pony rides were features for the children and later in the evening there was an entertainment and a dance. In the afternoon there was a baseball game.

The road for half a mile in front of the school was lined on both sides with parked cars and the grounds at the opposite side from where the dinner was served looked like a public parking grounds with the hundreds of machines lined up in rows. Almost as many bore District licenses as those of Maryland.

Same People Attend Annually.

The dinner has been an annual event for more than ten years and has grown steadily. Like Thanksgiving it always comes at a stated time. It is held the last Tuesday in July. The date is cleared of all other organization activity in that neighborhood and everybody is always there when the day arrives. No telephone committee is needed to remind Montgomery County people it is to take place. They know all about it and have no intention of missing it.

A few among those in the crowd yesterday were Dr. and Mrs. Morton G. Lloyd, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis H. Russell and their daughter, Miss Ruth Russell; Mrs. Frank Hoadley, president of the Maryland State Federation of Women's Clubs, who drove out with Mrs. Frank Linzell, her daughter, Miss Peggy Linzell, and Miss Vella Winner, publicity director for the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

Also Mr. and Mrs. B. Peyton Whelan, Mrs. Ford Young, of the Bethesda Woman's Club; Mrs. A. B. Foster, Mrs. T. Brook Amiss, Dr. W. W. Skinner, chairman of the board of regents of the University of Maryland and Mrs. Skinner, from Kensington; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Perry, Mrs. U. D. Nourse, Mr. and Mrs. Chester Graham, Mrs. George Winchester Stone and Mrs. George Johnson.

Post Staff Photos.

Those who weren't serving dinner were providing entertainment for the hundreds who attended the annual dinner of the Woman's Board of the Montgomery County Hospital last night at Sherwood High School, in Sandy Spring. Mrs. W. A. Marth, Miss Sally P. Brook and Miss Mabel Metz are shown at the right, relaying food from the kitchen to the tables where dinners were served in the tent. Below are Dorothy Louise Selby and her little brother, James, patronizing the grab bag, of which Miss Katherine Riggs is in charge. Pony rides were another feature enjoyed by the children who attended the event.

Water Sports Continue to Hold Spotlight Of Activities at Y. W.'s Kamp Kahlert

Water sports, as usual, still hold a prominent part in the life of every girl at Kamp Kahlert of the Y. W. C. A., with swimming, sailing, canoeing, boating all claiming a share of time. A new life-saving class has begun. As a result of the one held in the first two weeks at camp, the following girls are now junior lifesavers: Harriet Kusenberg, Becky Young, Eleanor Hanson, Mary Rogers and Dorothy Hastings. There are also some senior lifesavers, who are Mary Sartwell, Henrietta Howard, Noradeane Hamilton, Alice Holmes and Frances Holmes.

The Girl Reserve Camp Stay-at-Home is closing the summer season of 1937 with an exciting week of activities.

Today the junior campers plan to take a "trip around the world" before saying goodbye to Camp Stay-at-Home. With the aid of a gang-plank, pilot wheel, life preserver of the "S. S. G. R.," impromptu costumes, and a properly garbed captain for atmosphere, the girls will "dock" at various countries during the day. There they will enjoy skits and informal dances given by other campers as representatives of the particular country they are "visiting." A highlight of the "trip" will be luncheon with "King George and Queen Elizabeth" in "Buckingham" Palace."

Tomorrow will be the culminating day of the camp season. At 10:30 a. m. the senior girls will present a hill billy program on the rambling theater, sponsored by the Community Center Department at Montrose Park in Georgetown. The girls have been working on their "show" for several weeks, and will appear in characteristic mountaineer garb, replete with pipes, beards, "chawin terbaccy" guns, banjos and harmonicas. Heralded by "Bill's Hilly Band" they will present their repertoire of "mountain music" and other acts.

"Thirty Minutes to Go," a one-act play by Theodore Tiller 2d, will be the first feature of the gala closing evening of Camp Stay-at-Home, tomorrow evening. The dramatic group of senior boys and girls, under the direction of Eugene Kressin, of Roadside fame, assisted by Miss Mabel Cook, Girl Reserve executive, have been working together for five weeks every Monday and Thursday night of the camp season. The comedy which concerns a young girl faced by the problems of securing a husband in 30 minutes in order to inherit a large fortune, has the following cast: Pat Flynn, June Kennedy, Stuart Magee, Betty Musson, Walter Nicholas and Arthur Turner.

Although there is no charge for admission to the performance, which will take place in Barker Hall of the Y. W. C. A. at 8:15 p. m. those desiring to attend must secure complementary tickets through the Girl Reserve office.

Following the play, the boys and girls will hold their closing dance on the roof garden of the Y. W. C. A. from 9 to 12. The group has the following committee in charge of arrangements for the dance: Chairman and master of ceremonies, John Walker; decorations, Ben Barger; program, June Kennedy; head waiter, Stuart Magee, and refreshments, Pat Flynn.

Women's Club to Take Boat Ride Tomorrow

A boat ride down the Potomac will be one of the summer festivities of the Women's City Club. It is set for tomorrow evening from 5:30 to 8 o'clock and is for members and their friends. Reservations are being made at the clubhouse, and picnic lunches will be packed at the club, it has been announced, for those who leave their orders at the coffee room not later than today.

Although the regular club programs have been suspended for the season, members who are remaining in the Capital gather for bridge on Tuesdays under the chairmanship of Mrs. Raymond Keller.

"Madame Chairman" . . .

By Suzanne.

MISS MAE HELM, assistant corporation counsel for the District, is among the energetic Capital officials who walk to the office every morning. Even the warm weather doesn't discourage her. Maybe that's because she's from down in Kentucky, where hot weather is no more of a novelty than it is here.

MRS. DAVID CUSHMAN COYLE, one of the members of the joint operating committee of the national clubhouse of the A. A. U. W., is off with Mr. Coyle for a motor trip through Virginia and Tennessee. In Blacksburg, Va., at the Polytechnic Institute, Mr. Coyle is scheduled to make an address, which is the immediate reason for their trip South just at this time. They will go from there down into Tennessee where Mrs. Coyle formerly lived.

Earlier in the season they were in Florida and then in Maine. They will not be back in Washington to stay until September.

THE D. A. R. already is making preparations for its part in the celebration of the sesquicentennial of the Constitution. Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig, State regent, is chairman; Miss Lillian Chenoweth, vice regent, is vice chairman, and Mrs. Earl Brentwood Fuller, corresponding secretary, the third member of the committee on arrangements.

The program will be in Memorial Constitution Hall, with music by the Navy Band Orchestra, under the direction of Alexander Morris, and a speaker, who has not yet been announced. The "Daughters" are inviting members of other patriotic organizations in the Capital to join with them in the observance and plan the massing of the colors as one of the features of the occasion.

JOINING THE RANKS of famous pens is a simple little brown one with a stub point, used by the President the other day in signing the act repealing the "married-persons clause," so long and ardently opposed by those who object to discretion against women. The pen, which has helped make history, is now the possession of Mrs. Willie R. Goodwin, a member of the Democratic Women's National Council and one of the most zealous workers for the passage of the repeal measure. In her efforts, she has interviewed 250 members of Congress and made 13 visits to the White House—the thirteenth, for the purpose of obtaining the pen for which she had asked in advance.

Arts Club Gives Opera Program Before Friends

Familiar Numbers Sung in 'Rehearsal;' Informality Delights Guests.

Members of the Arts Club and their friends gathered in the garden behind their historic club house on I street last night for the regular club dinner, followed by the presentation of an opera program under the direction of Miss Estelle Wentworth. Miss Wentworth was guest of honor at the dinner and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Richards acted as hosts for the evening.

The program was the same given last week at the Sylvan Theater by Miss Wentworth's opera group. The first part, entitled "An Opera Rehearsal," represented what might happen back-stage with temperamental opera stars clamoring for the spotlight. John Cassidy had the role of stage manager and among the prima donnas were Virginia Weedon and Mildred Sherman. Miss Weedon's duet from "Martha" with Ray Baine was received with enthusiasm. Other bits from scenes of familiar operas also were woven into the program.

U. S. Regains Davis Cup After 10-Year Loss as Parker Defeats Hare

NATS WIN 5TH IN ROW, BEATING CHISOX IN 9TH, 6-5

Budge Beats Austin In Anticlimax Test

Milwaukee Boy's Straight-Set Victory Over Hare Clinches Cup in First Match of Day; Final U. S. Margin Is 4-1.

By Scotty Reston,
Associated Press Staff Writer.

Wimbledon, England, July 27.—America's "war babies" galloped off with the Davis Cup today as Frankie Parker and Don Budge swept the final two singles matches of the challenge round with Great Britain and brought the Stars and Stripes to the end of a ten-year campaign aimed at recovery of the international team tennis trophy.

To Parker, compactly built 21-year-old youngster from Milwaukee, went the honor of clinching the series with a 6—2, 6—4, 6—2 triumph over Charles Edgar Hare in the first of today's closing matches. Then Budge, "veteran" of the team at 22 and like Parker a grammar school student when America last held the cup, made the final series count, 4—1, by whipping the British stylist, Henry Wilfred (Bunny) Austin, 8—6, 3—6, 6—4, 6—3.

Trophy Is Presented.

When it was all over, Her Highness the Princess Helena Victoria lifted the big trophy from a table draped with the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack, and handed it over in the name of the British who had held it since 1933 when France's six-year grip finally was broken.

Thus the cup which had defied all American efforts since age crept into William Tatem Tilden's legs, was ready for its first crossing of the Atlantic since 1927. That was the year that Rene Lacoste and Henri Cochet whipped Tilden and "Little Bill" Johnston on the final day of the challenge round and took the cup back to France with them.

And not the least remarkable feature of the American triumph was the fact that it was accomplished with perhaps the youngest team that ever reached a Davis Cup challenge round. Gene Mako, Los Angeles blond and third member of the squad, is only 21.

The Heroic Figure.

Although deprived of the privilege of scoring the clinching point, Budge remained the heroic figure in America's successful drive. It was the singles victory the Oakland, Calif., redhead scored over Hare on Saturday and the doubles triumph he and Mako earned against C. R. D. Tuckey and F. H. D. Wilde yesterday that left Parker in a position where he could win the cup.

And it was the lionhearted Budge who shouldered almost all of the terrific burden in the interzone finals with Germany and whipped Gottfried von Cramm in the most spectacular five-set match Wimbledon's center court ever has seen to clinch America's berth in the challenge round.

It perhaps is fitting that Budge, on the final day of the campaign, should have some relief from the remorseless tension of the past nine days.

The crowd seemed to know that Parker hadn't really won the cup, that Budge actually had done the work with his noble victory over Von Cramm.

Call His Name.

And they demonstrated this fact when the tall, lean red-head appeared for his meaningless match with Austin. They applauded long and called his name. Perhaps never in Wimbledon's history was a foreign player shown so clearly the crowd was with him.

Actually it wasn't a match at all. Both men experimented with their shots. They exchanged racquets for one game. Budge taking Bunny's unorthodox stream-lined creation and breaking the little fellow's service with it.

They laughed and joked with one another. In the middle of the fourth set, for no reason at all, they simply stopped playing, ordered tea, walked over to the gallery rail together and drank it.

And the crowd loved it. They howled and applauded every shot, laughed at the wrong time, did exactly as they pleased, and when "Bullseye Budge" and Bunny left the court arm in arm, they gave them a tremendous ovation.

This Morning

Isadore Goldstein on Box Fighting.

By Shirley Povich.

His Ninth Street Shirt Shoppe was not exactly teeming with customers and the latest consignment of Klassy Kut Klothes had been duly hung up and marked down to $17.98 with two pair pants, so Goldie Ahearn said he was glad to see this department.

POVICH.

"Hello, mine very good friend," said Ahearn, nee Isadore Goldstein, haberdasher and box-fight matchmaker for Joe Turner. "You can toin on the heat now. It's all settled."

What was all settled, and what did he mean, "Turn on the heat?"

"For my Joey Archibald-Lou Gevinson box fight on Monday. Blast it good in the papers. Get me a $10,000 gate. Wotta show! Wotta show! And that in't all."

What else was there?

"I just called the telegraph company. Only $4.60 to send a night letter to Johannesburg in Africa. That's where Pete Sarron is. I can have 25 words for four bucks sixty, and I'm sending Sarron a cable that he can fight the winner of the Archibald-Gevinson fight.

"He'll take the fight, too. I'm guaranteeing him $6,000 for his end of the match. It'll be a world championship featherweight fight for Washington. Sarron will put up his title and we'll have it in September at the ball park. Blast it good in the papers. Toin on the heat."

But, more important to Ahearn and Turner, it seems, is next Monday's Griffith Stadium battle between Archibald and Gevinson, the new sensation of District boxing, vs. the local boy who is making good. Ahearn and Turner will make much money on that show, they figure. They have Archibald signed for 25 per cent of the take and Gevinson for 21½ per cent. It looms as their most profitable venture of the season.

"It will be a good fight, too," assured Goldie. "Good matchmaking, that was. I don't go into these things with my eyes shut. I visualize my fights. I figure what kind of a style this guy has got and what kind of a style that guy has got and when the fight looks good to me I buy it. I bought this one cheap and they will give me a good fight."

This department admitted that it has the prospects of a pretty good brawl—a natural—but only as long as it lasted. From what I had seen of Archibald, he would put Gevinson away in about four heats, I ventured.

"Ho, ho, don't be a sucker," hohoed Ahearn. "Gevinson can knock this guy Archibald out. He is absolutely the best left-handed puncher I ever seen. Archibald won't know how to fight him. Don't forget, Gevinson's a southpaw.

"And a southpaw has 40 per cent the best of it any time he goes in there against a right-hander like Archibald. Those guys don't know how to fight southpaws. They're used to circling to their right and when they move that way against a guy with a good left hand, they get clipped. In one night a fighter can't change his style.

"But don't run Archibald down in the papers. Say he is a good fighter, too. Say it will probably end in a knockout with one of 'em stretched on the floor, because they're both good game kids and they won't go out standing up. But I like Gevinson. He reminds me of myself."

And in what particulars did Gevinson remind Ahearn of himself.

Vell, I'll tell ya. Foist of all he's the featherweight champion of the Twenty-ninth Division of Washington's National Guard. So I was too. Then he's a Jewish boy. So I was too. Gevinson is a southpaw. I was a southpaw. How do you like that for particulars or do you want more?

I told Goldie I was satisfied if Gevinson was, but on that last point a bit of a doubt remained with me. I was recalling the night at Berwyn 11 years ago when Ahearn himself, entering the ring with that 40 per cent advantage that Goldie says a southpaw normally has, got himself knocked out in one minute of the first round by Al Foreman, a right-hander.

Yanks Score 6-5 Victory Over Tigers

Outhit, 15-8, but Bases on Balls Hurt Losers; DiMaggio Gets Homer.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 27.—Despite some of the poor base-running which marked the closing games of their last Western trip, the Yankees today opened a home stand with an 11-inning, 6-5 triumph over the Detroit Tigers.

Gained on the strength of Red Rolfe's home run with one out and a man on base, it gave Red Ruffing his thirteenth triumph of the season against 3 defeats and stretched the champions' American League lead to six games over the White Sox, who lost to Washington.

The Yanks were outhit, 15 to 8, and didn't get a single safety off Whistling Jake Wade, the Tigers' starting pitcher, until the sixth. Then Rolfe drew one of the 11 passes issued by Wade and Jack Russell, his successor, and Joe DiMaggio followed it up with his twenty-eighth home run of the season.

In the eighth Wade was knocked out as the Yanks put together two singles, a double steal, a walk and a double for two runs to tie the score. Russell, coming in with the bases loaded and only one out, fanned Tony Lazzeri and got Myril Hoag on a grounder.

Meanwhile the Tigers had picked up one run each in the first, third, fifth and eighth, Charley Gehringer having started it off with a home run, his seventh, into the lower rightfield stands.

Medwick's Homer Tops Giants, 9-8

Card Slugger Connects With Two Men Out in the Ninth Inning.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, July 27.—Coming to bat in the last half of the ninth with two out and the score tied, Joe Medwick today blasted his twenty-first home run of the season just inside the left field foul line marker to give the Cardinals a 9-8 victory over the New York Giants.

The defeat dropped the Giants three games behind the league-leading Cubs.

The Gas House Gang appeared to have won the game in the fourth, when they blasted Carl Hubbell off the mound with seven hits, including a four-bagger by Johnny Mize and doubles by Terry Moore and Don Padgett, got another hit off relief pitcher Dick Coffman and rolled up a total of eight runs.

But the Giants, with "College Try" Blondy Ryan at short, didn't give up there. They had scored once in the first half of the fourth, and bounced back with four more in the sixth to knock Si Johnson out of the box. Successive singles by Mel Ott, Sam Leslie, Harry Danning, Ryan and Jim Ripple and a Two-bagger by Lou Chiozza accounted for the runs.

Ryan's second single formed part of another two-run rally in the seventh, while Chiozza's second double, a sacrifice and a single by Joe Moore tied the score at 8-all in the eighth.

Werber's Double Scores Tieing and Winning Runs in Eighth.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, July 27.—Bill Werber's two-bagger, scoring Moses and Finney in the eighth, gave Philadelphia an uphill triumph, 4 to 3, over the Cleveland Indians in the opener of a three-game series today.

The game was a hurling duel between Mel Harder and George Caster, each allowing seven hits. Solters hit a home run with the bags empty in the sixth inning.

Jess Hill, centerfielder playing his first home game for the Athletics, batted a single to score Finney in the fourth for the A's first run.

Yoder Leads 6 Amateur Qualifiers

Has 150 to Lead 3 Washington, 3 Baltimore Winners.

By Merrell W. Whittlesey,
A Staff Correspondent.

Baltimore, Md., July 27.—Washington and Baltimore, the arch intercity golf rivals, split the national amateur qualifiers three each here today but the Nation's capital salvaged an edge in the day's play when its adopted son from North Carolina, black-haired Levi Yoder, won the qualifying medal with a 150 total, fashioned from 18-hole scores of 76 and 74.

The Beaver Dam and Columbia "Iron Man," Martin F. McCarthy, trailed Yoder by three strokes while the host club ace, Donald McPhail, recent runner-up in the Middle Atlantic, was next at 155, tied with Jack Fulton, a fellow club member, Willy Shea, Congressional, and a third host club member, Harry Parr 3d, completed the select six.

A stiff wind and Baltimore's major golfing test rebuffed the field of 19 place seekers to the national event to the effect of finding the medalist's score of 150 exactly ten strokes over regulation figures while the play-off figure, in which Shea and Parr won over W. B. Tomlinson, of Richmond, was 7 strokes higher or 17 strokes over the 36-hole par of 140.

A pair of place-seekers from the Chevy Chase Club provided more of a feature than any of the fortunate winners. Ralph Quinter, the slick-haired former winner of his club's invitation, well on his way to a berth on the eighth tee of the afternoon round, took 5 strokes on the par 3 ninth and 9 on the par 4 tenth, only to lose by a single stroke.

The nationally known linksman from the same club, Page Hufty, required eight strokes on two separate holes, the second and eleventh,

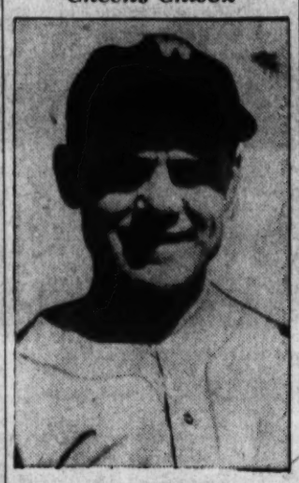
Pete Appleton Hero With Relief Pitching

Holds Sox to Three Hits After Weaver Is Batted Out in Second Inning; Myer's Single With Bases Full Wins Game.

By Shirley Povich.

Out of the bullpen—another word for the doghouse when you speak of pitchers—old Pete Appleton was summoned yesterday afternoon at the uncustomary hour of 3:30 p. m. to attend to some important pitching chores for the Nats who were having their difficulties with some obstreperous Chicago White Sox.

Checks Chisox



PETE APPLETON.

They had just batted Monte Weaver out of the box in that second inning and the Nats were in need of some big league pitching when Manager Bucky Harris' glance fell upon Appleton, doing his daily stint out there on the warm-up reservation.

Now old Pete had but lately been consigned to the pitchers' doghouse. A week ago Harris had quit on him in disgust. He couldn't win and he was demoted to bullpen duty. He was, after a sensational season in 1936, no more than a relief pitcher, doomed to the thankless job of late-inning pitching with the game probably long since won or lost.

But what a relief pitcher that guy Appleton turned out to be yesterday. He got three guys out for Weaver in that second inning, he held the White Sox to three hits for the rest of the game, and he ushered the Nats to their fifth straight victory. Old Pete was swell.

The score was 6 to 5.

Washington won the game in the ninth inning when Buddy Myer, smarting under the insult to his batting prowess, delivered when the White Sox purposely walked Joe Kuhel to pitch to Myer, spanked a single into leftfield with the bases full, to bring matters to a happy conclusion.

That ninth inning began with a hit by Buddy Lewis, whose single to centerfield was his fourth safe hit of the day, but young J. Dungan Rigney, a spare-ribbed rookie right-hander, appeared to be out of his ninth-inning miseries when both Cecil Travis and Al Simmons grounded out to the infield.

But by this time, Lewis had moved around to third base and strategy called for a walk to Johnny Stone after Rigney had pitched two bad balls to him. And then, to give his infielders a play at any base, Manager Dykes ordered Kuhel also walked. That brought Myer up, and you know the rest.

Nats Are Sprightly.

It was a sprightly gang of Nats who went out after their fifth straight win as the game began. Zeke Bonura's home run into the left field seats in the first inning with Walker on base had set the Sox up in a 2-0 lead against Weaver, and then the Nats acted as if they were hopping mad.

Mel Almada whacked Johnny Whitehead's first pitch for a single to center and then Buddy Lewis walloped a single to the same spot. Cecil Travis belted a hard drive toward Appling that the shortstop muffed and the bases were full.

In this crisis Al Simmons, banged a single to right, as befitting a clean-up hitter and two runs scored. Johnny Stone wafted a long fly to right, and Travis scored from third base. Joe Kuhel breathed new life into the uprising with a single to right and Simmons scored. That made it 4-2 and young Rigney finally got the side out for Whitehead by forcing Rick Ferrell to bang into a double play.

Sox Add Another Run.

The Sox wrung another run out of Weaver in the second inning when Appling bashed a triple to left. Weaver walked the next two batters to fill the bases and then walked himself—out of the box. In came Appleton to fan Rigney, but the run got home on Hayes' fly to Stone.

After that Appleton was some shucks out there. He allowed only one hit for the next three innings, by which time the Nats had boosted their lead to 5 to 3, producing a run in the third, when Simmons doubled to right center and Kuhel beat out a hit to Appling.

It was entirely Appleton's fault that the Sox came up with two runs to tie the score in the sixth. He pitched only one hit in that inning—Sewell's single, but a walk to Appling and Lewis' tardy performance on Berger's tame grounder were mighty factors in the Sox's uprising.

The first hitter to face Appleton reached base in both the seventh and eighth, but it did the Sox no good, and in the seventh the Nats muffed a chance to score when Lewis beat out a bunt and Travis pushed him to third with a single before anybody was out, but in that ninth they didn't muff.

Reds Defeat Boston, 3-2, On Homer

Scarsella's Ninth-Inning Blow Scores Two Runs and Wins Game.

By the Associated Press.

Cincinnati, July 27.—Lee Grissom, 34-year-old Cincinnati southpaw, won his tenth victory of the season today as the Reds defeated Boston, 3 to 2, in a sensational ninth inning.

Grissom permitted only one hit, walked none and struck out ten up to the ninth frame.

Then Reis batted for Danny MacFayden and singled. Garms doubled and Warstler fanned for the third time to become Grissom's eleventh strikeout.

Vince DiMaggio, whose seventh-inning single made him the only Bee to reach first base in eight innings, then slammed a double to score Reis and Garms.

Bob Smith then took up the Boston pitching duty. He retired Lombardi and Jordan, but hit Goodman with a pitched ball. Les Scarsella, first baseman recently converted to an outfielder, hit a game-winning home run into the rightfield bleachers.

Landis Denies Betting Probe By His Office

St. Louis Affair Strictly Internal; Horse Betting Hornsby's Business.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 27.—Kenesaw Mountain Landis, commissioner of baseball, denied emphatically tonight published reports from St. Louis that he was about to launch a wholesale investigation into betting on horse races by major league players.

The gambling issue was revived with the dismissal of Rogers Hornsby, as manager of the St. Louis Browns last week.

Neither is the American League interested in pursuing the private affairs of Hornsby, said President William Harridge.

"It was strictly an internal affair with the St. Louis club owners and Hornsby," Harridge said. "The club owners felt that they were dissatisfied with the showing of the team and they asked him to turn back his contract. I assume that a very amicable agreement was reached with Hornsby in surrendering his contract which called for a salary of $20,00 for 1937 and 1938."

Commissioner Landis said he was always ready to investigate anything connected with the game that might do it any harm, but was not willing to pry into the ways in which players spend their money, unless such spending would be of a nature that would affect the game itself. There has never been any evidence, Landis said, that Hornsby had bet on anything but horses, which did not affect his baseball ability. It merely affected his bank roll.

Said Commissioner Landis:

"I am constantly looking out for the welfare of baseball. That is part of my job. Any time that anyone has any information that is of importance to this office, I am always glad to receive it. That is exactly how the situation stands at this time."

There were reports that Landis wanted to question Milton Delmas, the Browns club house boy, who was discharged along with Hornsby, and later reinstated. The reports from St. Louis said that Delmas had placed bets for Hornsby and other players, but he denied it.

"Now don't get me mixed up with bat boys," Landis bellowed.

Louis-Farr Meet, Sign for Big Bout

New York, July 27 (AP).—Tommy Farr and Joe Louis met for the first time today, shook hands, but did not wish each other luck.

They were introduced in the offices of the New York State Athletic Commission where they formally signed articles for their August 26 heavyweight title fight in the Yankee Stadium.

Angel Child Wins Trotting Feature

Old Orchard Beach, Me., July 27 (AP).—Dr. A. O. Taylor's bay mare, Angel Child, placed 2-1-1 to win first money in the 1,000 Nelson trot, feature event of today's Grand Circuit meeting here. "Specs" Erskine held the reins of the Maysville, Ky., horse.

Calumet Evelyn, brown mare owned by McConville Brothers, of Ogdensburg, N. Y., was second. The fastest heat was in 2.02½.

The Old Orchard pace, purse $800, was captured by Hal Cochato, brown gelding, owned and driven by Sep Palin, of Indianapolis. Fayre Lady, black mare from Butler, Pa., was second. The best time was 2.03½.

Cushing Is Victor In Canadian Golf

Ottawa, July 27 (AP).—Harry Cushing, of Butler, Pa., came through with a 1 up first-round victory over H. W. Soper, of Montreal, as nearly 100 players started play in the Canadian amateur golf championship today.

Charlie Grant, Cleveland, and R. C. Garretson, Ashland, Ohio, were defeated, however. Grant fell before R. A. Ellis, Montreal, 4 and 3, and Garretson was eliminated by Johnny Richardson, Calgary, 3 and 2. Pete Kelly, of the Detroit Red Wings hockey team, also survived the first round, defeating H. R. Pickens, Montreal, 3 and 1. Freddy Haas, of New Orleans, the defending champion, drew a bye through the first round and will not start play until tomorrow.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—IRKSOME, $5.00, $3.60, $3.00; MY GOODNESS, $8.20, $5.00; CHARWITCH, $5.60.

IRKSOME was steadied along back of the pace for the first half mile, moved up on the outside when improving her position, ran down the leaders in the stretch to draw out steadily. MY GOODNESS, well placed all the way, supplanted CHARWICH from the lead and despite holding on willingly, was unable to withstand the bid of the winner. CHARWITCH went to the front in the opening strides, saved all possible ground, but was not good enough for the first two in the closing drive.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 3:03. Winner, M. E. Sruff's b. m. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BROWNEYED PAT, $8.00, $3.80, $3.20; FLICKERING, $4.80, $4.20; AURA, $5.00.

BROWNEYED PAT, well placed all the way, moved up on the outside to supplant FLICKERING from the command and steadied along in front, was never seriously threatened. FLICKERING drew clear in the first quarter mile, was steadied along, made a game bid to go along with the winner and while not good enough, held on with good energy to the close. AURA closed ground during the last furlong.

DAILY DOUBLE, IRKSOME AND BROWNEYED PAT, PAID $19.40.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 3:34. Off at 3:35½. Winner, C. A. Grande's gr. h. (8), by Morvich—Girl o' My Heart. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $675; second, $175 third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 1:13 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MOROIL, $14.60, $6.00, $3.60; TAKAWALK, $5.60, $3.20; MOUNT ECHO, $3.20.

MOROIL, far back early, moved up steadily on the outside in the last three furlongs, went to the front with a rush, drawing out fast in the last sixteenth. TAKAWALK moved up willingly when called upon and held on gamely to the end. MOUNT ECHO went into contention with a rush nearing the far turn, loomed up menacingly at the stretch turn, was impeded and was unable to close any ground in the final drive.

FOURTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post at 4:08. Off at 4:10½. Winner, Mrs. A. Schwartz's gr. g. (5), by Tic Satrap—Pink Lily. Trained by A. Schwartz. Value to winner, $675; second, $175; third, $100 fourth, $50. Time, 1:46 3-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SATRAPAL, $8.40, $4.60, $3.60; U DEMON, $5.20, $4.20; COUNT ME, $8.80.

SATRAPAL was rated along back of the pace for the first six furlongs, wore down U DEMON in the last sixteenth, drawing out readily. U DEMON opened up a good lead by the time the backstretch was reached, was steadied along in front and held on gamely to the end, although no match for the winner in the closing test. COUNT ME, well placed and slightly reserved for the first six furlongs, held on stubbornly to the end.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000. The Saratoga Purse; allowances. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won handily; place driving. Went to post at 4:41. Off at 4:43. Winner, C. S. Madison's br. c. (3), by A. Jom or Aromatic—Emplette. Trained by D. W. McKinley. Value to winner, $675; second, $175; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 1:12 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—JAMES N., $7.40, $3.60, $2.80; MAYRO, $3.40, $2.80; GAY BALKO, $3.80.

JAMES N. had speed from the start, met determined opposition from GAY BALKO, drew clear after rounding the far turn and continuing gamely to the end was never seriously threatened. MAYRO was steadied along back of the pace, saved ground into the stretch and outlasted GAY BALKO for the place. GAY BALKO made a determined bid to go along with the winner, but was not good enough, although holding on willingly to the close.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post at 5:16. Winner, Coward and Coffey's blk. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—NIGRETTE, $8.20, $4.60, $3.20; HIGH POLISH, $13.00, $6.40; LUCKY JEAN, $3.40.

NIGRETTE moved up on the outside to gain a slight lead at the close of the opening quarter mile, drew clear before reaching the stretch and held away to the end. HIGH POLISH was prominent all the way and, while unable to reach the winner, outlasted LUCKY JEAN for the place. LUCKY JEAN had speed from the start and held on willingly to the close.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post at 5:49. Off at 5:49½. Winner, W. Two-dollar mutuels paid—RUFFY, $18.60, $7.00, $5.00; BREEZING ALONG, $7.20, $5.20; DEAR BEAU, $7.40.

RUFFY was steadied along back of the pace until leaving the backstretch, moved up fast on the outside and gaining the lead in the stretch, drew out in the last furlong. BREEZIN ALONG, far back until the last three furlongs, came with good energy on the inside through the stretch run. DARK BEAU, well placed throughout, faltered in the last sixteenth.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 6:21. Off at 6:24½. Winner, Mrs. V. Qualifying Swimming Tests Held Takoma Team Leads Round With 75 Points; Park View Is Second.

The qualifying rounds in the public recreation swimming championships were held yesterday at the Takoma, East Potomac, McKinley High and Anacostia pools, with first, second and third place winners in all events becoming eligible for the city-wide championships to be held Friday at McKinley.

In the boys' meets, the classes ranged from 70-pounds to the unlimited unrestricted group and in the girls from the 10-12 years class to 17 years and over.

Point tabulations were not kept in the girls' competition, but the following scores were recorded by the boys in the team contests: At Takoma—Takoma, 75; Park View, 19; Palisades, 15; Hamilton, 6; Lafalette, 6, and Chevy Chase, 5. At East Potomac—Georgetown, 68; Jefferson, 35; Hoover, 23; Gallinger, 22; Weightman, 8; Western, 8; Montrose, 8, and Rossell, 3.

At McKinley—McMillan, 63; Thomson, 23; Henry-Polk, 11; Cooke, 10; New York Avenue, 10; Judiciary Square, 8; Langdon, 7; Noyes, 5; Burroughs, 5, and Johnson-Powell, 5.

At Anacostia—Rosedale, 70; Sherwood, 17; Eastern, 14; Garfield, 13; Anacostia, 11; Stanton, 10; Maury, 5; Potomac Avenue, 5, and Virginia Avenue, 5.

Results—Public recreation swimming championships. Qualifying Meets for City-wide Meets.

Red Birds Defeat League All-Stars

Columbus, Ohio, July 27 (AP).—The Columbus Red Birds defeated the All-Stars, 7 to 4, tonight in the fourth annual American Association All-Star contest, after putting on a 3-run splurge to come from behind in the eighth inning. Reynolds, of Minneapolis, All-Star outfielder, and Crouch, Columbus catcher, hit home runs.

Hall Eliminates McDiarmid In Seabright Net Tournament

Scores Are 6–0, 3–6, 6–4; Guernsay Ousts Sidney Wood in Another Upset; Allison, Frank Shields and Alic Marble Win.

By the Associated Press.

Sea Bright, N. J., July 27.—Lanky John McDiarmid's hopes of gaining a second leg on the historic Sea Bright tennis bowl were blasted in the thihd round of the Lawn Tennis and Cricket Club's golden jubilee tournament today.

The bespectacled Princeton professor succumbed to the New York veteran, J. Gilbert Hall, 6—0, 3—6, 6—4.

McDiarmid, winner of the Eastern clay courts title last week, experienced an off day. Hall took advantage of his faulty forehand to achieve the second upset of the day.

Wood Eliminated.

In the other men's singles surprise, unseeded Frank D. Guernsay, jr., of Orlando, Fl., 20-year-old sophomore at Rice Institute, eliminated the tow-headed Sidney B. Wood, of New York, 8—6, 7—5, to reach the round of eight.

Top-seeded Bobby Riggs, the confident Los Angeles youth, experienced some difficulty in his third-round match with Hal Surface, of Kansas City. Although he dropped the first set, Riggs triumphed, 1—6, 6—1, 6—4.

Wilmer L. Allison, the Austin, Tex., Davis Cup veteran, whose season's activities will end with this tournament, had less trouble eliminating Norman Sickel, of Oak Park, Ill., 6—2, 6—3.

Jiro Yamagishi, Japanese national champion, played sensationally at times to turn back unseeded Norbett Burgess, of Oak Park, Ill., in straight sets, 6—3, 6—2.

Hunt Extended.

Sixth-seeded Joseph R. Hunt, of Los Angeles, who lost to McDiarmid in the final here last year, was extended by Don McNeill, youthful Oklahoma City ace, but Hunt's net play carried him to an 8—6, 9—6 victory.

Frank X. Shields, of Hollywood, former Davis Cupper, who "retired" two years ago for a fling at the films, defeated Robert Harman, of Berkeley, Calif., 6—1, 6—3, and Gardnar Mulloy, of Miami, completed the quarter-finals bracket by trimming E. Ramsay Potts, of Memphis, 6—2, 6—2.

In the women's division, Alice Marble, of Los Angeles, and sturdy Jadwiga Jedrzejowska, of Poland, moved nearer their anticipated encounter in the finals.

Miss Marble defeated Miss Eleanor Dawson, of Piedmont, Calif., 6—0, 6—2.

Miss Jedrzejowska eliminated Miss Kay Winthrop, of Boston, 6—1, 6—2.

Goodman and Favorites Win Amateur Play

Turnesa, Yates, Haas, King, Perry, Givan, Emery Qualify.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 27.—Paced by Omaha's stocky Johnny Goodman and little-known Ed Kingsley, of Magna, the favorites, almost without exception, survived the qualifying rounds today as the starting field for the National Amateur golf championship was completed on 28 scattered courses.

Goodman, 1933 Open titlist and one of the favorites last year, and Kingsley fired identical scores over par-72 courses at Omaha and Salt Lake City, respectively. Each posted 36-hole totals of 137, 7 under par. Omaha's ace got his with a 68—69, while Kingsley reversed the procedure, getting a 69 on his first round and 68 on his second.

The 153 who qualified today completed the field of 179 which will open the championship at the Alderwood Country Club, Portland, Oreg., August 23. Twenty previously had qualified at Boston and Tacoma, Washington, while six former champions automatically qualified.

Low Scores Feature.

While the sharpshooting of Goodman and Kingsley was easily the highspot of today's play, low scores were the general order of the day. Paul Leslie, of Jefferson City, Mo., carded a 139 to pace the field of Chicago were Gus Moreland, Peoria, Ill.; Don Armsrong, Aurora, Ill., and Russell Martin, of Chicago, easily survived.

Only a stroke behind Leslie was Bobby Servis, of Dayton, Ohio, who paced the field at Cincinnati with a 36-hole total of 140. Marvin (Bud) Ward, of Olympia, Wash., also posted a 140 in leading the qualifying field at Tacoma, Wash., last Friday.

The 1936 Walker Cup players called upon to play through the qualifying rounds were Charley Yates, Reynolds Smith, Scotty Campbell, Harry Givan and Walter Emery.

Yates was 3 under par with his 141 at Atlanta. Smith, Texas champion, showed the way at Dallas with a 142, while Emory was one of the three to qualify at Oklahoma City, although his 146 was four strokes under the leader, Dee Replogle, 18-year-old player.

Campbell and Givan earned their brackets last week at Tacoma. As former champion, Johnny Fischer, 1936 titlist, and Francis Ouimet, were not required to qualify.

Haas Posts 145.

Freddy Haas, jr., of New Orleans, intercollegiate champion and Canadian titleholder, posted a 145 at Detroit to lead a field that included Chuck Kocsis, Michigan's former intercollegiate king, and Melvin Harbert, Battle Creek, Mich., who cracked par by 20 strokes in winning the Michigan open. Both qualified, Kocsis with a 143 and Harbert with a 156.

The metropolitan district, led by Willie Turnesa with a 143; qualified its leading stars. They included Ray Billows, the State champion from Poughkeepsie; Tommy Goodwin, runner-up to Billows; Frank Strafaci, low amateur in the National Open; Robert Jacobson and T. Suffern tailer.

Only a few of the better known players failed to make the grade. They included, Johnny Lehman, of Chicago; Rufus King, of Dallas; Leland Hammon, Paris, Tex.; Sam Perry, Dixie veteran from Birmingham, Ala., and Clarence W. Hackney, jr., son of an Atlantic City professional.

Yates' brothers, Allan and Dan, filed with their more famous brother at Atlanta but found the pace too swift.

10 Out-of-Town Stars Enter Mid-Atlantic Play

Names of out-of-town entries continued to pour in to the committee yesterday for the Middle Atlantic men's singles championship, scheduled for the Edgemoor Club, Edgemoor, Md., Saturday, July 31.

Led by Bill Tilden 3d, of Philadelphia, such players as Hunter Lott, Tom Ridgeway, Princeton; Joe Oldhausen, Philadelphia; Chester and Franklin Kreska, Paul Hildebrand, Albright College; Buddy Goeltz, Harrisburg; Tommy Miller, Wilkes-Barre, and Jack Davidson, Ursinus, have entered. Entries will be received any time before the draw, Friday, at 8 p. m. Edgemoor can be reached by calling Wisconsin 1619.

missing the 157 total by a quartet of shots. The other Washington golfer to fall by the wayside was Forrest Thompson, the Beaver Dam veteran, who was well "all over the lot" and wound up with a 167, 10 too many.

Yoder was 76 in the morning with a 2-over-par hole in the third and a pair of three-putt greens on the first nine, and another double bogey on 11. A birdie deuce on the seventeenth gained one of the lost strokes.

The Woodmont and Chevy Chase invitation winner was playing good golf from tee to green through the day, but found trouble, as did the other 19 players, in the slippery putting surfaces. In the afternoon Levi birdied two and ten with 10-foot putts and ran into trouble on the seventh when his tee shot conflicted with an innocent apple tree. He took 6, 2 over par.

McPhail Leads Hosts.

The host city pace-makers, all members of the Baltimore exclusive Five Farms layout, were paced by the club star, McPhail, who played the inaugural nine in 34 strokes and rested on those laurels for the other three, playing them in 41, 40, 40. His afternoon round in the out course included a 30-foot putt on one, hole-out from a trap on three and 40-footer on five. In the morning round he required only 27 putts, 9 under regulation figures.

Fulton played the first nine in 37 in the morning and the back nine in 36 in the afternoon, but a pair of 41's in between placed him 5 strokes behind the pace-setting Yoder.

The play off, over the quick-death method, was easy for Shea. Willy just smacked a drive 250 yards, was short in 2, but chipped dead to the pin for a par 4 and win. Tomlinson was in the extra holes via a 30-foot putt for a birdie in 18, halved the first hole with Parr in 5's and lost the second to Parr's perfectly played par.

The three qualifiers from the District was four short of the seven sent last year, but the entry list was also much larger. It will be the first trip for Shea, freshman of the group, third for Y

U. S. Steel Corp. June Quarter Best in 8 Years

Preferred Arrears Cleared Up; $3.43 Per Share Earned on Common.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 27.—Directors of United States Steel Corporation today cleared up arrears on the senior stock and reported the largest quarterly income since 1929. They declared $1.25 on the preferred arrears and a regular payment of $1.75. This clears the way for action on the common stock at a later date.

Net income available for dividends in the second quarter totaled $36,173,682, compared with $28,561,533 in the first quarter and $12,862,423 in the second quarter of 1936. Net income available for dividends in the first six months increased to $64,735,215 from $16,238,727 in the like period a year ago.

Shipments of steel products in the second quarter were 3,916,233 tons, or 87.5 per cent of capacity, an increase over the first quarter of 5.9 per cent. Operations for the quarter as measured by finished product output averaged 88.4 per cent of total capacity.

Net earnings for the second quarter were equal to $3.43 a share on the common stock, compared with $2.55 in the preceding quarter, or $5.98 for the first six months. This was in line with Wall Street expectations.

The corporation fell in arrears on the preferred dividend in the first quarter of 1935 when a payment of 50 cents was ordered instead of the regular quarterly dividend of $1.75. A rate of 50 cents quarterly was in effect until July, 1936, when the payment was boosted to $1. Arrearages accumulated during the period of reduced payments amounted to $18.25 a share, or $65,751,300.

Liquidation was effected through payments of $2 in October, 1936; $7 in November; $4 in April, 1937; $2 in May and $2 in June, in addition to the regular quarterly payments of $1.75 as they accrued since October, 1936. The dividends are payable August 30, to stock of record August 2.

In the absence of Myron C. Taylor, chairman, who is in Italy on a vacation, Edward R. Stettinius, chairman of the finance committee, presided at the meeting.

Some Large Salaries Are Made Larger

By the Associated Press.

Several corporations reported to the Securities Commission yesterday they gave their executives pay raises last year.

Philip Morris & Co. paid its president, L. B. McKitterick, $143,699 last year, compared with $101,360 the previous year. American Water Works and Electric Co. lifted President H. Hobart Porter from $75,790 to $77,686, and United Light & Power Co. raised President Charles S. McCain from $61,815 to $63,585.

Republic Steel Co.'s president, T. M. Girdler, whose antiunion views were aired in a recent Congressional hearing, received $174,999 last year. The company paid General Manager R. J. Wysor $84,999 and Vice President Myron A. Wick $75,000.

No. American Co. Nets $2.01 a Share

Net earnings of the North American Co., of which the Potomac Electric Power Co. and Capital Transit Co. are units, amounted to $17,257,325 for the 12 months ended June 30, equal to $2.01 per share of common stock. This was an increase of 32.12 per cent compared with earnings of $13,061,587, equal to $1.52 per share, for the 12 months ended June 30, 1936. These earnings are after all deductions, including appropriations for depreciation reserves and preferred dividends.

Operating revenues were $119,162,690, an increase of 6.74 per cent. Of this amount, electric revenues accounted for $94,445,857, an increase of 8.39 per cent. Operating expenses, maintenance and taxes were $67,890,166, an increase of 6.54 per cent. Apart from taxes, these expenses to taled $50,603,678, an increase of 5.88 per cent.

Getty Group Seeks Tide Water Change

New York, July 27 (AP).—Stockholders of the Tide Water Associated Oil Co. have been asked by the J. Paul Getty interests to support a move for a change in management policies of Tide Water, it was learned today. In a letter signed by William G. Skelly, president of Mission Corporation, a Getty company, the Tide Water shareholders were urged to oppose any further increase in Tide Water common stock and to seek restoration of one-year terms for directors and a reduction in their number.

The Getty interests, of which J. Paul Getty, of San Francisco, is the leader, are opposed to election of directors for terms longer than one year, the latter stated. Under its present charter Tide Water directors are elected for three-year terms.

Wheat Climbs As U. S. Renews Export Trade

700,000-Bushel Shipment From Chicago Is First in Two Years.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 27.—Wheat soared 4⅞ cents a bushel, maximum, in Chicago today largely on account of renewal of large-scale export business in United States wheat.

Anxiety about likelihood of big damage by drought to wheat crops in the Southern Hemisphere furnished the chief immediate incentive for the upshoot of prices, as well as for sudden broadening of the volume of wheat export trade. Purchases of 700,000 bushels of United States wheat today to be shipped to Europe took place, as well as an equal amount of Canadian wheat. For the first time in two years, exports of wheat from Chicago to Europe were announced, two shiploads bound for overseas by way of Montreal.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were virtually the day's top level, 1⅞ to 4½ cents above yesterday's finish, July $1.22½, September $1.18⅛@$1.18¼, December $1.20-@$1.20⅛. Corn 1⅞ lower to ⅞ higher, July $1.02¼, September 97⅜@97½, December 73⅝. Oats unchanged to ¼ up, September 30⅞, and rye showing ⅜ to 7½ cents bulge, September 82. The outcome in provisions was unchanged to 5 cents advance.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Close Irregularly in Less Active Trading; Grain Prices Are Higher.

New York, July 28.—Financial markets felt calmly toward everything. Trunover in stocks at around 700,000 shares was the smallest of the month and prices drifted irregularly lower. Closing quotations were mostly a little better than the opening prices. September wheat rose 2⅜ cents to 118¼ cents a bushel.

If the Supreme Court battle has been one, giving business a stronger position from which to resist the encroachment of socialistic economic management and just plain meddling and hazing, the fighting is going less favorably in other sectors. The Senate has passed the short car train bill, which if accepted by the House will mean another shock of around $100,000,000 a year to the railroads in extra expense without any economic benefit to any one. It probably will not do, in the long run, what its sponsors claim, namely increase employment. The roads are in no condition to stand greater expense, and while a few more train crews might be given work, the purchase of equipment, the maintenance of tracks, and even the movement of freight would suffer, with the effect of a net reduction in employment over the country.

The same thing likely will turn out to be the case if the higher railroad wage demands are granted. Even half as much increase as the unions propose would send a good many more roads into bankruptcy, and would make impossible the reorganization of any road already in that sad condition. That isn't even a full chapter in the book. Most of the remainder can be read in the Black-Connery proposal, which would set up a Federal agency, i. e., the President, who could dictate every detail of every kind of business and halt the tide of prosperity, but unfortunately could with no magic start one up.

Flight of Fancy.

Industry might overcome almost any specific scale of hours and wages, through higher selling prices or increased efficiency, but it could find no means of combating the constant interference with its operations that are intended to be the heart and soul of the business management proposal. The braintrusting bird who got up that one has a great feature before him in the WPA field of creative arts.

Little reminders from the White House and the Capitol that the gentle art of strangulation has not been forgotten obviously are doing nothing to kindle the enthusiasm of businessmen. At the moment business is in addition in the midst of the poorest portion of the year for many industries, as automotive, retail trade, mining and steel. Stocks under the circumstances scarcely can be expected to do much more than move idly to the shifting airs of current earnings reports.

Second quarter profits, as more corporations disclose them, are good enough to sustain prices in most cases, or even to warrant higher prices were other elements less uncertain. That applies to industrial shares. Railroad securities are in another class. Traffic continues to improve, but likewise expenses are rising, even with full allowance for increased maintenance charges (which after all largely went to fill a large gap made in recent years) and the handling of the pension accruals. The first 66 railroads to report for June show a drop of 1.7 per cent in net operating income, although in first six months the gain was 15.6 per cent.

Steel Hopes Rise.

Nearly all railroad shares gave up from a fraction to a point. Missouri Pacific was an exception, although with reorganization said to be in sight the stock isn't likely to have much value. The majority of the industrial leaders softened. Steel dragged fractionally lower and was unable to improve until the late trading, when some buying took place on the hope that the quarterly report on profits, to be published after the close of the market, might prove to be unexpectedly good. General Motors, with a report to be printed tomorrow, was steady throughout, showing no signs either of hope or of fear.

Investment issues were dull and looked less appealing. After several days of hardening prices the Government bond list turned heavy and fell a little of its own weight. The weekly statement of member banks showed moderate sales of Government obligations possibly merely of a precautionary nature. Nothing is taking place at Washington to indicate any quickening of the deficit pace, nor unfortunately is anything being done or said to show that the idea is entertained of bringing the budget into balance. Foreign exchanges were quiet. Sterling dropped a little and francs were steady.

Wheat.

Our own experts in the Department of Commerce frequently make some rather wide guesses on the crops. Reports from Russia on anything are about as unreliable as many stories from Washington, as, for example, that one about economy on the Jefferson memorial and the simultaneous spending of a million or so on a moving stage for the WPA play project in the swamps northeast of town. Taken for what it seems to be, the story from Moscow that the Russian wheat crop this year promises to be large, with a yield of 30 to 50 bushels an acre in many regions is interesting. If the Russians can obtain such high yields as that for wheat, we ought to send a few of our expert farm advisers over to learn the business. An American farmer who can get half that yield is rare. A few years ago the Soviets seemed to think that we could teach them something, but they probably have got over that along with a lot of other notions, such as the one that our Government wasn't interested in a dictatorship over business.

Savings Banks Set New Deposit Peak

New York, July 27 (AP).—The National Association of Mutual Savings Banks announced today that its member institutions in 18 States had on June 30 total deposits of $10,207,803,494, the highest in history. Representing an increase of $106,729,514 during the half year, the association said the deposit total was "the largest sum of small capital ever gathered together in one class of banking institutions." The report added it represented about 20 per cent of bank deposits for the country as a whole. The number of depositors rose to 14,759,246, which was also a record for active accounts.

Cotton Recovers In Active Buying

New York, July 27 (AP).—Cotton advanced $1.00 to $1.50 a bale today on more active domestic and foreign trade buying while offerings tapered off. December rallied from 10.96 to 11.18 and closed at 11.15, with final prices 22 to 33 points net higher.

Cottonseed oil futures today scored advances of 6 to 9 points on sales of 122 contracts. Price improvement reflected the rally in allied markets, together with buying by large houses with Southern connections and scattered buying on technical reasons. Chase Bank Buys Insull Collateral

New York, July 27 (AP).—Chase National Bank, with a bid of $444,360, today acquired collateral behind a loan made by the bank in 1932 to Corporation Securities Co., of Chicago, bankrupt holding company which once was a part of the vast $2,000,000,000 Insull utility network.

The bank is understood to have loaned Corporation Securities Co. $500,000 shortly before the Insull empire collapsed. The regular legal procedure of foreclosing on the securities pledged behind this loan culminated today at an auction sale.

General Motors Earnings Drop $22,377,277

Quarter's Decline Due to Strikes and Higher Costs, Sloan Declares.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 27.—Net earnings of General Motors Corporation in the second quarter of 1937, declined $22,377,277, compared with the similar period of a year ago, Alfred P. Sloan, jr., chairman, disclosed in a financial statement today.

In a vigorously worded explanation he blamed "materially higher costs" together with inability, because of strikes to make full use of production capacities. After assailing inability of labor leadership to control its own followers he suggested a "proper respect" for understandings with industry might have to be "superimposed from without by due process of law."

Directly referring to the United Automobile Workers of America, he asserted:

"It cannot be said that so far the United Automobile Workers of America have proven themselves to be a responsible body, with ability to live up to their contractual obligations.

"Manifestly, neither industry in general, nor General Motors in particular, can be expected to long tolerate such a complete disregard of its own rights."

Net earnings for the three-month period, he said, totaled $65,731,100, including a nonoperating profit of $1,473,079, equal to $1.48 a share on the common stock after preferred stock requirements. This compared with $88,108,372, or $2 a share in the second quarter of 1936. For the first six months net earnings were placed at $110,545,266, or $2.47 a share, against $140,572,546, or $3.17 a share in the corresponding period last year.

Fundamental Investors.

Report on Fundamental Investors, Inc., for six months ended June 30 shows total net assets $10,697,776 equal to $22.37 per share of capital stock. This compares with $5,591,266, or $22.82 per share and $2,388,981, or $16.36 per share on the same dates in 1936 and 1935. Net income from all sources for first 6 months of 1937, after expenses and taxes, was $281,423.

Crude Oil Output Highest on Record

New York, July 27 (AP).—Crude oil production jumped to the highest level on record in the week ended July 24, the weekly summary by the American Petroleum Institute today indicated. The flow stepped up to 3,576,400 barrels daily, an increase of 18,450 barrels from the previous week.

Output east of California accounted for most of the upturn, gaining 14,550 barrels daily, to 2,906,400 barrels.

CRISIS FOR CROPS

Major crops are now in their most critical period. The effect of July and August weather upon wheat, corn and cotton largely determines final yields and current prices. Weather reports from all cotton and grain states are flashed to each Fenner & Beane office every business day. Trade accounts dealing in commodity futures are invited to use this firm's facilities to execute orders in commodities on the leading exchanges.

Foreign Exchange.

By the Associated Press.

Principal world currencies were unchanged against the dollar in uneventful foreign exchange dealings yesterday. The British pound after early strength, occasioned probably by Japanese selling of dollars and buying of sterling, dropped back to yesterday's closing level.

The French franc held a steady course at 3.74½ cents, while the discount on 90-day future francs narrowed to .15⅝ of a cent. Sterling was unchanged at $4.97¾ and the belga kept even. Netherlands guilders dropped .01 of a cent to 53.22 cents and the Swiss franc dropped a like amount to 22.97 cents.

London cables reported the dollar in demand at 4.97⅛ to the pound, compared with a similar rate for sterling on New York over night, up ⅛ of a cent. French francs ended unchanged at 133 to the pound.

The dollar in Paris closed at 3.744 cents to the franc as compared with 3.74⅛ cents in New York overnight.

Boston Wool Market.

Boston, July 27 (AP) (U. S. Dept. Agr.).—A moderate amount of business was transacted on finer Western grown wools today.

Good French combing lengths bulk fine territory clips in original bags brought around 95 to 97 cents, scoured basis. Original lots of similar grades carrying a good percentage of staple combing lengths occasionally sold at 97@98 cents. Bulk average to short French combing lengths fine original territory wools were 93@95 cents.

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London, July 27.—Stocks continued in good demand today with the market generally firm at the close. Industrials, mines and gilt-edged issues advanced. Home rails were steady, while transatlantics and oils had an easier tone.

Paris.—Price movements in the bourse were uneven today. Banking shares were heavy. Bank of France closing 85 points net lower. International issues were on the up-side, the industrial group was generally irregular and government bonds were quiet. Suez Canal moved up 160 points.

Liverpool.—Wheat futures, down early today following weakness in Winnipeg, ended steady, ⅛ to 1¾d higher. The market rallied on reports of dry weather in Australia, purchases of Indian wheat by English millers and covering. Cotton futures closed steady, 1 to 4 points higher on trade calling and short covering. In a thin market, early Bombay buying encountered scattered realizing and speculative selling.

IN MEMORIAM

WILLIAMS, WILLIAM AND ANDREW. In loving remembrance of my father, WILLIAM, who departed this life five years ago today, July 28, 1932, and my dear brother, ANDREW H. WILLIAMS, of Philadelphia, Pa., who passed away six years ago, September 19, 1931.

I often sit and think of them
When I am all alone.
For memory is the only friend
The grief can call its own.

Like ivy on the withered oak,
When all other things decay,
My love for them will still keep green
And never fade away.

Daughter and sister,
LOUISE GROLIG.

HARRISON STREET
JUST WEST OF CONN. AVE.

Harrison st., just west of Conn. ave., $13,500. There is no more attractive street in all of Chevy Chase, D. C., than this one. The house is an unusually comfortable one with 11 rooms and 2 baths. The lot is large and well planted. If you need a bit more than the average space this is a fine value in an outstanding location.

If you would appreciate a fine example of New England Colonial architecture, happily located on a wide lot, generously shaded by full-grown forest trees, see this one. The natural beauty of the setting has been enhanced by winding dry stone walls, rock gardens, terraces and an outdoor living room featuring a fountain and lily pool. You will find everything about the house in keeping with its unusual and lovely setting. The large panelled living room and dining room overlook the garden and the kitchen is the "last word." An attractive cocktail room or den and lavatory complete the first floor. Upstairs are four bedrooms, two baths and attic. The basement features a two-car garage, maid's room and bath and recreation room. If you want a really fine home, reasonably priced, see this one at $21,000.

$700 is all the cash required to buy this practically new semidetached brick house in a fine Northwest section. The rooms are large, the streets and alleys are paved, it is high location with an almost constant breeze. Owner leaving city has put price right for quick sale.

Chevy Chase, $9,950. This is unquestionably one of the best values we have offered in this lovely country club section for months. The house, just west of Connecticut ave. on a well-landscaped lot, 65 feet wide, is a particularly pleasing early American style. While the house is several years old, the equipment is modern and there is everything necessary for luxurious living, including a two-car garage. If you have experienced difficulty finding an attractive home in a refined neighborhood at this price, let us show you this one.

Rites Set Today In St. John's for R. H. Hagner

Rev. Salmond to Conduct Services for Realty Firm Founder.

Funeral services for Randall H. Hagner, prominent Washington real estate broker who died Monday in New York, will be held at 4 p. m. today at St. John's Church, 321 Sixteenth street northwest. The Rev. Henry C. Salmond, acting pastor, will officiate.

Death came to the 58-year-old head of the local real estate firm bearing his name in New York's Presbyterian Hospital. He had contracted pneumonia last Wednesday following a week-end trip to Watch Hill, R. I., where members of his family were vacationing. His wife and two sons were at his bedside when he died. Yesterday the body was brought here from New York.

A member of one of Washington's oldest families, Mr. Hagner first started his real estate operations in 1902, and with the aid of Alexander Britton Browne, his partner, gradually built up the firm of Randall H. Hagner & Co., Incorporated. Mr. Browne died last year.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Marguerite Colton Hagner, and four children, Alexander B. Hagner, of Warrenton, born of Mr. Hagner's first marriage to Anna Lawrence; Randall Hagner, jr., Marguerite Colton Hagner and Isabella Louisa Hagner, all of this city. The family home is at 2339 S street. Burial in Oak Hill Cemetery will be private.

Mrs. W.C.McDowell ToBeBuriedToday

Mrs. W. C. McDowell, for 17 years a resident of Washington, died yesterday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Rossel E. Mitchell, 7 East Melrose street, Chevy Chase, Md. She was 79.

A native of Richmond, Va., Mrs. McDowell came here after the death of her husband some years ago. Services will be held at Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church, of which she was a member, at 9 a. m. today with burial in Hollywood Cemetery, Richmond.

Survivors, in addition to Mrs. Mitchell, are a niece, Mrs. Hunter McGuire Doles, of Norfolk, Va., and four grandchildren, Emily, Edith, Edwin and Joseph Mitchell, of the Chevy Chase address.

Louis Blaustein, Oil Magnate, Dies

Atlantic City, N. J., July 27 (AP). Louis Blaustein, of Baltimore, former president of the American Oil Co., died this morning at a beach-front hotel where he had been spending the summer with his wife.

Baltimore, July 27 (AP).—Louis Blaustein, who died in Atlantic City today, was a Russian miller's son. He immigrated to New York in 1884 with 50 cents in his pockets and built a fortune by selling oil and gasoline.

Starting as a salesman for a Baltimore building firm in 1891, Blaustein developed the American Oil Co. He resigned from its executive positions last April. At that time, his oil interests were estimated at $12,000,000.

Senate to Act Soon On Navy Hospital

Senate action in the near future is expected on the bill, already passed by the House, authorizing erection of a new naval hospital and naval medical center in or near the District. Senator David I. Walsh, chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, has just filed the favorable report of the group on the measure.

Congress six years ago authorized the replacement of the Naval Hospital buildings with new structures on the present site, but officials later decided that the present location would be inadequate for future needs. The 1931 program would have cost $3,200,000. The new bill, now pending in the Senate, authorizes the expenditure of an additional $1,650,000, and grants the Navy Department authority to build the new medical center on a different site.

Pay Boosts End Strike Of Truckers in Akron

Akron, Ohio, July 27 (AP).—Wage increases ended this industrial city's ten-day-old trucking strike late today.

Paul Lavo, A. F. of L. truckers union business agent, and Carroll J. Roush, chairman of a negotiating committee representing the Akron Motor Transport Association, announced the settlement.

William Lyons Phelps

For Lighter Tomes.

It is important to keep up the agitation for books light in weight. Thirty years ago most British books were beautifully light in poundage, whereas American books were superb illustrations of excess baggage. And at that period of history, I opened the campaign in America; and here is a courteous and interesting letter I then received from the famous publishing firm of Henry Holt & Co., New York. The writer of this epistle, the scholarly and practical E. W. Bristol, spoke officially for the firm.

* * * *

December 12, 1907.

"I appreciate what you say about the weight of Pancoast's new book. As you probably know, the publisher's only means of procuring a perfectly smooth printing surface is the addition of clay to his paper stock, and that means the addition of weight. In our anxiety to make a pretty good job of the printing of the book, we may have overlooked the increase in weight. I hope the next edition will be less subject to a like criticism. So far as I know, we used as high-priced paper as the other publishers. Of course books printed in England have the advantage over those printed in America, thanks to our paternal tariff. There they are able to secure the kind of printing surface all of us seek by using Spanish grass (esparbo) instead of wood fiber in the pulp mixture, and largely omitting the clay. Still our papermakers are certainly improving their product in the direction of lightness, and I hope the next issue of the Pancoast book will make less of a drain on the reader's wrist muscles."

* * * *

Well, some years after this, American books (like American women) began to lose weight; until along about war-time our books were as admirable in this respect as the British.

But sometime after the war (nothing has been so good after the war as it was before it, and perhaps never will be) United States books began to become soggy and in this ugly and stodgy business the British books followed suit; so that for the last 10 years both British and American books are equally stained in sin. For it is a sin to make repulsive what should be attractive.

D. C. Man Dies At Buffalo in Motor Crash

Thomas L. Jamieson, a native of Washington, was killed early yesterday in an automobile accident in Buffalo, N. Y., members of his family were advised last night.

Jamieson, 26-years-old, spent his lifetime in Washington, until he left about two months ago to work for an engraving firm in Buffalo. He formerly had been an engraver here.

According to word received here, the car in which Jamieson was riding crashed into a parked car.

Three brothers, two sisters and his mother, all of Washington, survive him. They are Paul E. Jamieson, an attorney; Jesse E. Jamieson, a District fireman, and David F. Jamieson, an employe of the American Automobile Association. Mrs. George Darling and Mrs. Richard Stevenson, sisters, and Mrs. Annie J. Degges, his mother.

Funeral services will be held in the home of David Jamieson, 1621 Newton street northeast, where Jamieson made his home in Washington, at 9:30 a. m. Saturday to be followed by rites at 10 a. m. in the National Metropolitan M. E. Church of which he had been a member since childhood.

Hawkins Death Autopsy Is Held

After an autopsy on Dr. James A. Hawkins, 42, biological chemist, found dead Monday, under strange circumstances, Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald said last night death apparently was due to a heart condition. He stated however a chemical analysis of the contents of Dr. Hawkins' stomach would be made to determine if he died of poison.

Dr. MacDonald revealed there was evidence that Dr. Hawkins had recently used a hypodermic found in the kitchen of the Hawkins' home, 3515 Livingston street northwest.

Dr. Hawkins was conducting experiments in connection with deep sea diving at the Navy Yard. Associates told police he had complained of feeling badly for the past two weeks.

A colored maid found Dr. Hawkins in the kitchen of his home with bruises on his face.
